On account of the Rurki Wing of the 2nd Battalion Lincolnshire Regiment having to make room for the three garrison batteries coming from England in the beginning of November, the headquarters of the regiment will move into camp at Meerut shortly, sending a detachment to Delhi, to relieve the Left Wing, which, on account of fever, is also going into camp at Meerut. The regiment will remain at Meerut for the winter, taking part in the Camp of Instruction to be held there between Jan. 10 and March 10, after which, in all probability, the Left Wing goes into garrison at Cawnpore and the headquarters proceeds to Delhi.

IT has been decided to send the 1st Battalion King's Own (Yorkshire) Light Infantry by sea direct to Bombay from Rangoon, instead of viâ Calcutta and Allahabad. In the interests of discipline this is perhaps the wisest course, as it is well known that soldiers returning from a campaign get somewhat out of hand. The regiment will be concentrated at Mandalay on the 29th October, embark for Rangoon on the 2nd of November, where it will arrive on the 9th idem, and will embark next morning and will leave Rangoon the same day for Bombay, where it is timed to arrive on the 20th idem.

THE Government of India have decided that rice money is not to be given to the Native reserve soldiers of the Madras Army.

THE new compressed forage and compressed fodder are to have an extensive trial this autumn. A squadron of cavalry is to have 900 maunds of the concentrated food at the Lawrencepur Camp, and is to be kept on the same nutriment for a month to see how it answers. It will also be issued for the same period to three squadrons of British cavalry and a batch of mules at Meerut; and at Umballa experiments will be made on the person of a battery of horse artillery and some transport bullocks. Finally, 400 maunds of compressed forage mixed with the compressed fodder (bhoosa) are to be stored for a year at Calcutta, Quetta, Mean Meer, and Allahabad.

THE RELIEFS, 1887-88.

The Army in India will be augmented by six garrison batteries of Royal Artillery this trooping season, four of which will be quartered at Rurki, one at Karachi, and one at Umballa, for Jutogh. In addition to the above 1,068 men will be sent out to India to complete corps to the increased establishments. This extra number will be included with the drafts of the season, and will embark at such times as the drafts for the corps to which they are proceeding embark. The troops to proceed to and from India in the season 1887-88 are estimated at the following numbers of non-commissioned officers and men:—

Of Indian Tea the sales have been about the same size as those held last week, and there is no material change in quotations to note. The proportion of fine and finest continues small, and the best liquoring parcel from 1s. 4d. upwards have met with more attention. The figures just issued are very satisfactory, as the deliveries for October amounted to 8,294,000 lbs., against 6,620,000 last year. To the end of last month about thirty million pounds of this season's crop had been sold, against about twenty-three millions to the same date in 1886, so that of the nine millions excess shipped from Calcutta to 31st ult., seven millions have been disposed of in this market. Ceylon: A larger quantity has been brought to auction, amounting to 4,400 packages. The demand continues good, especially for Teas for price, and some of the fine and finest now show comparatively good value. Java: In the absence of sales there is nothing to report. Some Teas, however, from recent arrivals are advertised. The figures for the past four months, as compared with previous years, are as follows:—

Imports.
Indian	34,889,000 lbs.	26,564,000 lbs.
Ceylon	4,426,000 lbs.	2,803,000 lbs.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

The recent decline in the value of agricultural produce, which has more or less affected production in many parts of the world, and to which the recrudescence of the ever open Irish sore is, in part at least, attributable, has been very severely felt, and bids fair to be a cause of very serious trouble, in England. To theorists it may be a consolation that, if agriculturists starve, they do so strictly in accordance with rule, and that Nature is merely "weeding out the unfittest"; but, to well-wishers of the true prosperity of their country, the prospect of the utter ruin of the largest, and a most important, section of its population is fraught with the deepest anxiety. It is refreshing to turn from theory to facts: and these Mr. W. J. Harris gives us, from his own experience, in the first article of the November National. Mr. Harris, himself a considerable corn merchant in Liverpool, purchased 2,000 acres between Dartmoor and Exmoor about fifteen years ago; less as a desirable investment than "with a view to healthy recreation and (he being then a Radical and 'under the conviction that landowners had far too many advantages accorded to them') political study." He appears to have been liberal as regards allotments, and to have farmed well, though not too highly. Yet he has had to reduce his cultivation, and allow land to be made pasturage; prices having "gone far below what a tenant can live at, and labourers' wages can no longer be paid. Tillage," he adds, "cannot be encouraged with our present system of free imports . . . it is the manifest duty of every nation to defend its own taxation; and if foreign products, which pay no taxes to our exchequer, are allowed to come in free, with all our taxes and burdens still remaining on our own production of similar goods, the production must in time cease here, and, on some of our most productive soils, there will be nothing to tax. By divorcing the workers from the soil we are incurring a fearful responsibility:" we are driving them into cities already much overcrowded. Mr. Cripps, who contributes an essay on "Competition and Free Trade," deals with a cognate subject, and points out that the increase in our food imports is by no means necessarily a sign of growing prosperity. It has "coincided with a widespread depression in English agriculture, and the town populations are complaining of the influx of workmen from the country . . . who only gain occupation by competition in our overcrowded labour market." Both writers see, what indeed seems obvious, that "in connection with agriculture the question of protection for the sake of protection has become prominent." It is, indeed, a burning one; nor should we be surprised if the next volte-face of a politician so eminently skilled in the art of "turning his back upon himself" as the old Parliamentary hand, should be a sudden discovery that Codlin's the farmer's friend, and that Protection (to be introduced by him) is the only true way to benefit the depressed and undeservedly maligned agricultural interest! Allied to this matter, of the importation of foreign food products, which contribute nothing to the Exchequer, is the unrestricted influx of foreign paupers, to which is, in part at least, attributable whatever distress may prevail at the East-end of London; the results of which threaten trouble as winter advances.

This, too, is noticed by Mr. Norris in his article on "Fresh Work for Parliament," as well as by Mr. Tregarthen, who deals with "Pauperism, Distress, and the Coming Winter." The former writer asks the pregnant question, "whether it is more important to find employment for our own people or for the foreigner?" To the latter, both by importing what we can, and ought to, produce, and by employing him in doing what our own people can do as well, we have shown most undue favour, and our unwisdom, like curses, has "come home to roost." We sincerely trust that Parliament may be induced to give, during the next session, something like adequate attention to the question of English v. foreign interests. But the first requisite is the oiling of the now rusty and creaking Parliamentary machine. And to this end the amendment of the Closure Rule is indispensable.

Events in France are in a delicate state; and, though Mr. Kaufmann's paper on "The Latest Phase of French Socialism" contains little that is absolutely new, it presents matter which well deserves consideration. The outlook is gloomy. The leaven of Socialism has dangerously permeated the masses; respectable politicians there are but few; and a severe blow has been dealt to the influence of the most highly placed, and perhaps the most respectable, among them. Nothing is certain, as we write, in French politics: only one thing will, probably, be certain for many years to come, "Rien n'est si certain que l'imprévu"; a war, likely enough, imprévu by many, let us hope, not imprévu by the British ministers, who have to provide for the safety of their Fatherland!

We commend to notice Mr. Floris' sensible remarks on "Comfort and Safety in London Theatres," and Miss Layard's notes on female authorship "What Women Write and Read." Mr. Kebbel contributes some interesting facts regarding the relations between the Iron Duke and George Canning, which so greatly influenced "Tory Foreign Policy Sixty Years Ago," while the cause of "Dogs in Disgrace" is well pleaded by Lord Onslow.

THE CAMPAIGN OF THE CATARACTS.*

"Too late in its grand conception, too late in its immense effort, tried upon a theatre of unexampled magnificence, too late in its labours, its trials, and its sufferings; too late in all, even in the glory that remains to one name, and the sorrow that belongs to an entire nation." Such is Sir William Butler's comment on the chapter of England's history, which is written in blood and shame—the blood of the hero, who alone, single-handed and deserted, upheld the honour of his country and the dignity of his race—the shame of the Ministry which, while turning its eyes to Heaven and thanking God that it was not as other Ministries, allowed a most noble-hearted servant of the State to be massacred upon the altar of expediency, and his bones to lie unburied on the plain of vacillation of purpose. And what is the tale which the author of the "Great Lone Land" has to proclaim?

On the 4th August Sir W. Butler received an intimation that Lord Wolseley wished to see him on the morrow; and what a startling question he was asked on arrival at the War Office! Can you build in England 400 boats capable of carrying 4,000 men, with provisions for three and a half months, ship them from this country, land them at Alexandria, carry them by train 350 miles to Assouat, thence, partly by train, but mostly by river, reach Khartoum during the approaching winter season, and return from Khartoum before the Soudan summer is at hand? The answer was "Yes, provided you set aside governmental red tape, and run a line straight through the densely crowded streets of the great city of 'Departmental Administration.'" But what a task! First the pattern of boat had to be selected. It "must sail well, pull easily, and draw only 20 or 22 inches of water when freighted with a load of four tons. It must have keel for sailing, beam to give steadiness in the rush of rapids, freeboard to allow rowing, elasticity to bear the strain of transport, depth to store the immense load it will have to carry. It must be seasoned in every timber, for the Italian sun is fierce, and the desert winds are parching." But all was accomplished on the 18th August, the model was finally[settled, and on the 16th September the whole of the boats were en route to Egypt, and right nobly they played their part. On an average they accomplished ten and a-half miles per diem, cataracts included. Only a few were lost, and nine-tenths were in as good condition as on the day they left the English yards. They equipped the whole Desert Column, and supplied it with food to last for two months, and lastly, only one officer and six men were drowned.

But all was in vain, for the expedition arrived thirty-two hours too late! Poor Gordon had passed to the "Unknown Land," and an outraged country had to mourn in sackcloth and ashes the fatal imbecility of purpose, the scornful indifference, the bitter insouciance, which is recorded in letters of national humiliation upon the pages of Time.

This is the story which is comprised in the "Campaign of the Cataracts." It will well repay perusal. Heroism is not always confined to the field of battle or the plains of war. There is greatness in the deeds of a soldier's everyday life at times of danger; and never, we venture to assert, have England's sons played a nobler part than when, toiling beneath a Nubian sun, they laboured and struggled to help a comrade in distress, and tried on their part, to undo the melancholy doings of those who had no heart to pity, no soul to commiserate. They failed; but time will write, with the pen of honour and renown, the nobility of purpose, the immensity of zeal, which characterises the heroes of Sir W. Butler's "Campaign of the Cataracts."

STATISTICAL ATLAS OF INDIA.†

It would be difficult to praise too highly the Statistical Atlas of India recently produced by Sir Edward Buck. Its object and scope cannot be better expressed than in the words of the preface. It is intended only "to give a general idea, to a great extent through the agency of maps, of the character of the country, its inhabitants and agriculture, with the addition of such statistics as may serve to illustrate its commercial and educational progress." The programme is modest, but its execution is worthy of the highest commendation. First, as to subjects. There are chapters on Physical Configuration, Geology, Rainfall and Climate, Irrigation, Crops, Food Supply and Famine, Revenue and Rent Systems, Forest Conservation, Area and Population, Emigration, Foreign Trade, Finance and Taxation, Public Instruction, and Feudatory States. What more could be wanted, or indeed, if wanted, be given? Next as to authors. What an array of names—Mr. Medlicott, Mr. Blandford, Mr. Ribbenthrop, Mr Justice Cunningham, Sir W. Hunter, and lastly, but by no means least, Mr. Pedder, who contributes the most masterly essay on Revenue and Rent which has perhaps ever been presented to the public.

Of course, a work of this nature is intended primarily for reference, and its interest should be subservient to its solidity;

but in this instance the chapters might with advantage be read as a pleasant and easy mode of acquiring general information in regard to the Queen's Eastern possessions. The volume is accessible to unfavourable criticism in one, and only one, quarter—its size is terribly uncouth, so large that no library shelf can possibly hold it. A baby table is needed for this

"Monstrum, horrendum informse ingens."

Perhaps, however, even from this point of view, a critic must not dip his pen in gall, for the diagram and tables, unless folded, would necessitate large pages.

POEMS OF MANY YEARS AND MANY PLACES.*

In the introduction to his book of poems the anonymous author makes his excuses for having "held sweet converse with the muses." No such apology is needed, for, high praise though it be, it is true that there are not a handful of men living who could write such exquisite lines as are scattered broadcast throughout the length and breadth of a work of which its author may well be proud. But who is this unrecorded poet? Clearly he was a member of the Indian Civil Service. The evidence on that point is overwhelming, unless, perchance, he may have held high place as one of the famous school of military officers in Civil employ. Then he is a linguist. Latin, Greek, Italian, German, Sanskrit, Persian, and Hindi all flow fluent from his pen. Again, who is the great "unknown?" Many names have occurred to us, but none that could fitly bear a chaplet of fame not destined for the brow of the mere rhymester and dabbler in verse, and we abandon the attempt to pry where prying is forbidden by anonymous publication.

To single out selections where all is good is neither easy nor profitable—the reader must choose his own pets. Some will like the invocations to the Deity who rules the universe, others will admire the allusions to Indian scenery; some, again, will love to dwell upon the passages betokening pious resignation and happy serenity, while others, once more, will seek pleasure in lingering amidst the portals of love and the place where the soul resteth in peace. Mothers will weep over the "Empty Cradle" and the "Twin First-born." Fathers will view with pride the homage of the writer as a dutiful son, albeit not every parent has added seven years to the allotted span of three score years and ten. But be they who they may all will be pleased. The volume can be read again and again, and each time new beauties will peep forth, new gems glisten in the sunshine of sweetness. The fountain is pure, and the waters gush forth free from all taint of indelicacy, or spleen. There is the voice of gentleness and the lisping of fervent piety—'tis an atmosphere of universal love.

Go, gentle reader, read and be at rest.

UNA'S REVENGE.†

Una's revenge is a prettily-written tale which, without any pretence at high art, is yet calculated to pleasurably while away an hour by the fireside. The characters, too, are carefully delineated. In one case, a frank, free, open-hearted, guileless maiden inspires the confidence which always attaches to candid simplicity and gentle modesty; such was Una Meredith. In the other, an unscrupulous, designing intriguer, full of hatred and malevolence, occasions disgust—the reader recoils in aversion from a being the beauty of whose face masked the hideousness of her mind; such was Eva Maitland. What happened and how it happened, what was the revenge and how it ended, must not be told. Suffice it to say that Una shines bright, while Eva sinks low in the horizon of shame and degradation. Melville Gray's work is pretty and attractive; the young may read it with pleasure and profit, and those of older years may ponder with advantage over the danger of deceit and the end of evil doing.

The Indian Magazine (London: Kegan Paul; Bristol: Arrowsmith) for November contains some papers of interest, especially those referring to the all-important "woman question." Pundita Ramabai's Home for Child-widows is the subject of a few lines from herself, and we are glad to see that she continues hopeful, while the sale in America of the entire first edition (2,000 copies) of her book, "The High Caste Hindu Woman," and the demand for a second edition, lead to the hope that "Our American Cousin" may be induced to part, in the Pundita's favour, with some of those dollars the acquisition of which so greatly engrosses his attention. The miserable lot of the weaker sex, under "The Hindu Family System," is depicted in colours not a whit too dark by Pundit Bishan Narayen Dar of Lucknow, and is touched on by Mr. J. B. Knight in his notice of Mr. Wilkins' "Modern Hinduism."

We are glad to see Mr. Pinhey's very favourable account of the working of the new Abkari laws in Tanna and Kolaba, districts "formerly notorious for the drunken habits of their population." We believe that the craze, that the Indian Government encourages drunkenness in order to profit thereby, is now discarded by all rational beings, and abandoned to "ideologicies" like Mr. Samuel Smith, and fanatics like Sir W. Lawson. Some good translations of Native legends give variety to the present number.

In the Army and Navy Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for November, Colonel Rivett Carnac has another historical paper showing the progress of the English in India from 1700 to the Peace of Aix la Chapelle, 1748. The "Experiences of a Volunteer during the late Riel rebellion in Canada," by Mr. Carew-Reynell, late 90th Battalion Winnipeg Rifles, contains some interesting information regarding that revolt, which was not put down without some hard fighting. Mr. Melville Grey commences a series of "Scenes in Burma, from an Eye-witness," which will be welcomed by many readers. The opening chapters of a serial, "The Old Adam, a tale of an Army Crammer," by Mr. Coleman Davidson, promise well. The magazine is further lightened by a very readable sketch by L. S. G., entitled "We shall meet again;" and an account of the Beaufort Club by Dr. Dickinson, and Furlough's pleasant gossip of the month, help to make up a very good number of this popular service magazine.

The November number of the Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) is an excellent one, containing as it does many papers of varied interest to service readers, with many illustrations. Captain Gall's papers on "Modern Tactics" constitute a valuable contribution in themselves. The "United States Navy of the Future" is also important, short, but full of information. A description of Meerut, by Dr. Dickinson, with an account of the outbreak of the Mutiny there, and of the fatal falter which was made in not pursuing the mutineers, is not less interesting reading because it is a story which has been told before. It will always carry with it a terrible fascination for the reader. Major Burgess's paper on the "Civil Employment of Soldiers" is a very practical one, and an account of the Rifle Regiments (60th and Rifle Brigade) which is commenced in the present number by an officer of the staff, enters a field of rich historical research. A description of Messrs. Haight and Wood's electrically steered sub-marine boat, with illustrations, shows an important advance in torpedo-boat management. Another valuable paper, also illustrated, is that on "Safety Screens for Rifle Ranges." It tells the story of Royal Engineer blundering and the opposition shown to the simple, but exceedingly ingenious method suggested by that very clever inventor, Mr. Richard Morris. Other useful and interesting papers are given, which will help to make this the only illustrated magazine in the services extensively read by naval and military men.

The Art Journal contains an excellent engraving of Gerome's well-known picture of "Consulting the Oracle." In other respects the number is, perhaps, a trifle below par. But maybe invariable excellence has made us fastidious, and obviously there must be degrees of perfection. No journal can be uniformly in the highest rank of merit. But if we are captious in one direction we will make amends in another, and avow that the Art Journal for 1887 by the same firm (Messrs. J. S. Virtue and Co.) is truly beautiful. It is no small modicum of praise to assert that giving as it does an account of the life and work of the best known, and in some respects the greatest, French painter, Meissonier, it is every way worthy of the man whose pictures are reproduced. The engravings are first-class and the letterpress equally good.

Books for Review.—"On a Surf Bound Coast," by A. P. Crouch (Sampson Low, Marston and Co.); "Little Peter," by Lucas Malet (Kegan Paul, Trench and Co.)

The Englishman says that the Military Department of the Government of India has been unable to sanction a proposal made by the officer commanding the Calcutta Volunteers that the loan of Rs. 31,000 sanctioned for the building of a head-quarters for the Volunteers be granted free of interest and repayable at the rate of Rs. 200 per mensem.

On Tuesday, the 1st inst., the marriage of Mr. J. R. Hardy, Deputy Commissioner of Jhansi, India, with Miss Charlotte Anne, eldest daughter of Admiral Luard, C.B., of the Lodge, Witham, took place at Bombay. On Tuesday afternoon Admiral Luard received the following brief but comprehensive telegram:—"Bombay, 6.10. Witham, 3.15. Married." Miss Luard started from England for India on Oct. 1st by the P. and O. s.s. Victoria. She was accompanied by her mother. The journey out occupied twenty-one days. The wedding was celebrated with great rejoicings at Witham, where the family of the bride is deservedly honoured. A salute was fired from several guns (including a brass cannon captured in Burma) immediately on the receipt of the telegram. The Union Jack was at once displayed from the tower of St. Nicholas Church, and the bells rang out merry peals, which were repeated during the day. A large wedding party assembled at The Lodge, including representatives of both families.

THE "FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW" AND THE PLANTERS.

IT may be remembered by many, if not by all, of our readers that in the September number of the Fortnightly Review there appeared an article from the pen of a Mr W. Stobie, describing an "Incident of Real Life in Bengal." The incident was an alleged outrage on a Brahman, who had been flogged to death by a brutal indigo planter for neglecting to keep his allotment in order. The story was told in a most sensational way, with all sorts of harrowing details, so as to stir up the ordinary British reader to a high pitch of virtuous indignation against his own countrymen in the East.

When this story appeared we did not think it necessary to notice it or comment upon it. Although headed an "Incident of Real Life" we took the liberty to regard it as a fiction, or to think that it was made up from some long-forgotten tale of bygone years, when stories got abroad about the unwillingness of ryots to cultivate indigo, and of the harsh measures adopted by certain planters (of a very old school) to make them do so. In nine cases out of ten, perhaps, those stories had very little foundation in truth, but it cannot be denied that with a certain class of people they found considerable credence. The agitation which arose about the publication of the Bengali play of the Nil Durpan is forgotten even in Calcutta to-day, although it was a very strong and bitter agitation while it lasted. The Rev. Mr Long, the translator of the drama, and who was sentenced to imprisonment in consequence, and Sir Ashley Eden, at whose instigation it is said that the translation was made, are now dead, but both lived to see old hatreds and bitter feelings succeeded by sentiments in which confidence and esteem mingled; and acting upon the impulse of such sentiments both of these men could not help regretting much that had occurred in the past, and they were only too willing to let that dead past bury its dead. The war of words that raged then would be inexplicable to the present generation. The planters were held up by the missionaries and their political friends to all manner of scorn. The indigo crops, it was said, were sown in the blood of the ryots. Tortured and maddened by misrepresentations which blackened a whole class for the misdoings of a few, the planters were not less fierce in their animosity towards their opponents. The contest was one which exemplified to the fullest the folly and falsehood of extreme opinions. No bitterer contest of words ever waged in India than this. But time, which is the soother of all personal sorrows, laid his healing hand upon this trouble too. Both sides have long ago "buried the hatchet," and agreed to "forget and forgive." It would appear now, however, that a writer—for what object we are not prepared to say—has wilfully attempted to stir up the strife anew by bringing forward a calumny against the planters as an incident of real life in Bengal, and written as if it had occurred only yesterday. The result is the very indignant letter from the secretary to the Behar Indigo Planters' Association, which we publish in our columns to-day. It is addressed to the editor of the Fortnightly Review, and enters most fully and carefully into all the details of the story as told by Mr. Stobie. It shows most conclusively that the incident described could not have taken place within the memory of any planter now in India, and it challenges every one of the harrowing and revolting statements made by Mr. Stobie, who it appears went to Behar as assistant in an Indigo factory in 1866, and terminated his career as a planter in India in 1879. Mr. Hudson's powerful appeal to the editor of the Fortnightly cannot well be left unanswered :—

The maligned officials of our Government will, I have no doubt, be placed in a position by Government to defend their reputations if considered necessary, but we, the maligned non-official residents in India, must rely on the right minded Press of England to see justice done to us. You have permitted us to be libelled in your journal; we now appeal to you to afford us redress—you can only do by assisting us to elicit the truth from Mr. Stobie.

It may, perhaps, be open to question whether Mr. Stobie is worthy of the expenditure of so much indignation. Many Anglo-Indians, like ourselves, no doubt thought the story a fiction when they read it, and will perhaps be surprised that the members of the Behar Association should consider it worthy of such serious notice. But, having taken the step they have, we are sure that the sympathies of all Anglo-Indians will be with a body of gentlemen than whom a more kindly, just, and honourable set of men do not exist in India to-day.

BOMBAY AND MANCHESTER YARNS.

THE question of the competition which Bombay yarns were offering to the older Manchester trade has been a source of considerable anxiety to many of the Lancashire spinners for some years, and now at last it has reached a somewhat acute stage. The matter has been brought prominently before the public by the discussion which took place at the usual quarterly meeting of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce on the 31st ult. Mr. J. C. FIELDEN brought forward a motion that, in view of the strides of the Bombay spinners and the damage done to the interests of Manchester and Lancashire, it was desirable an inquiry should be made into the subject. He backed his resolution by carefully-prepared figures, showing the quantities of Bombay and Manchester yarn exported respectively to China and Japan. Many present were only too conscious of the competition, but the figures gave them considerable food for reflection. Mr. FIELDEN was supported in his request for an inquiry by Mr. HENRY LEE, whose experiences in India he retailed for the benefit of those present. His remarks can scarcely be called of a hopeful character, as will be seen from the report we give elsewhere. Manchester now, somewhat tardily, begins to realise that Bombay competition for the markets in that country, and in China and Japan, means very serious menace to her interests. Nor does our own information point to its becoming less severe. Month by month, and year by year, for the last five years, Bombay has been increasing, now fast, now slow, in the delivery of yarns to China and Japan, which has all been done at the expense of Manchester. We have at different times drawn attention to the increasing Bombay figures, and anyone may turn them up who cares so to do.

Hitherto India has only been able to supply the coarser descriptions of yarns for export, and cloths for her own consumption. Great progress is, however, being made in the latter class of goods, which is in the main retarded, however, by the fact that long stapled cottons have not been successfully grown in India. There is no reason to believe that this will always prevail, however, and with a better growth of cotton the competition with Lancashire will become keener. Already the yarn demand for China and Japan has given a stimulus to the growth of cotton in the North-West Provinces. The cotton there grown makes up into yarns which are eminently suited to make the coarser cloths wanted by the Chinese and Japanese. It is in this class that they are so successfully competing with Manchester, and it well behoves the merchants of Lancashire to institute a rigid inquiry into the way that they are losing ground. If feasible the inquiry will likewise, we presume, suggest what steps they consider in their opinion the spinners can take to retain the trade they have held for so long.

Mr. HENRY LEE pointed out to the meeting in Manchester that a great factor was the question of cheap labour, which was available in India. The wages are considerably less than in Lancashire, and the hours are longer, whilst Indian children seemed as quick as our own; he had never seen "a frame 'doffed' more quickly than it was by those Indian children." There is one other powerful element which did not receive the attention at the meeting which it certainly merits. We refer to that of exchange, which must undoubtedly be in favour of India, where more or less fixity of values is in force as between the two countries. Both China and India are silver using countries, whilst Japan, though nominally having a gold basis, deals far more in silver, and is de facto a silver using country. Between India and China and Japan there are not those fluctuations which are so uncertain, as between the Far East and England. Dealing with India one is not likely to get caught on differences, and this must act as an element in its favour. As far as merchants in the Far East are concerned it matters little whether they buy from India or Manchester—outside the question of exchange—but in Manchester itself it is becoming a question of the first import, and the report of the committee of the Chamber will be awaited with considerable interest.—London and China Telegraph.

NAPLES AND THE P. AND O. COMPANY.

The P. and O. Company are adding Naples to the list of their numerous ports of call, and from Dec. 1 and once a fortnight thereafter one of their large ocean-going steamers will call there on its outward voyage to the East, thus affording a new and pleasant route to travellers to Rome, Southern Italy, and the Riviera. Many, en route for Italy, will be glad to exchange the tedium and vexation of the long railway journey for a pleasant and healthful sea trip on board a large and luxuriously-appointed passenger steamer. It has another and far greater value attaching to it, and that is that it affords to the passenger whose destination lies further afield another fresh route to the Far East, and whether he be bound for Egypt, India, China, Japan, or Australia, he will find this fortnightly steamer connecting in Egypt with all the lines of the company's steamers running to the above destination a valuable addition to the facilities already afforded by this company. The new Naples service is in addition to the P. and O. Company's existing Continental service, vid Venice and Brindisi, the route by which the mails are conveyed, and will be, therefore, quite a new and additional feature in Eastern voyaging.

AN ACT OF REVENGE.—An extraordinary occurrence is reported to have recently taken place at Howrah. The wife of a fireman, in the employ of the East Indian Railway, was asleep in her bed, when a Native servant entered her room, and, by means of a knife, severed the tip of her nose clean off. The man, it appears, had been sentenced to suffer six months' rigorous imprisonment for theft, and his sentence had expired the day previous to his committing the offence. He is still at large, though he will be, it is believed, shortly apprehended.

MANUAL

OF

COMPRISING PRACTICAL RULES FOR LEARNING THE LANGUAGE, VOCABULARY, DIALOGUE, LETTERS, AND IDIOMS, &c., IN ENGLISH AND ARABIC.

BY

Rev. ANTON TIEN, Ph.D., M.R.A.S.,

Hon. Curate of Holy Trinity, Milton-next-Gravesend; Medallist of the Roman University de Propaganda Fide; First Class Honour Man in Arabic, Syriac, and Hebrew; and Proxime Accessit in Classics. Formerly First Class Interpreter to the Allied Forces in the Crimea; K.C. of the Order of the Medjidié, &c., &c.; Author of the "Levant Interpreter" and the "Egyptian Handbook"; and Reviser of the Arabic Prayer Book, &c., &c.

"Dr. Tien's little book will be found a valuable guide to the traveller who wishes not so much to talk as to understand what he hears spoken and sees written in common Arabic. In the course of a hundred pages a clever summary is provided of Arabic grammar, which will be found sufficient for all ordinary purposes, and which may easily be made the subject of further instruction from the native teacher."—SATURDAY REVIEW.

"The most useful portion of the book consists of the dialogues, the idiomatic exercises, the vocabulary, and other additions of practical usefulness, such as lists of official titles, of tribal names, and information on the divisions of time, on weights and measures, currency, and commercial, legal, and political terms."—ATHENÆUM.

"The perusal of Dr. Tien's admirable work will be of the greatest value to officers and others under orders for the East."—MORNING POST.

"Will be found very useful by soldiers, officials, students, and merchants desirous of obtaining a certain degree of proficiency in the spoken language, which is becoming in these days of increasing importance."—DAILY NEWS.

"Dr. Tien's Manual can be confidently recommended as the most simple, practical, and trustworthy guide which has yet appeared."—OVERLAND MAIL.

"The rules and explanations are clear, terse, and to the point, and we cordially recommend his book to all who wish to acquire a conversational knowledge of Arabic."—TRUBNER'S RECORD.

"The book is of a handy and convenient size, and both author and publishers have rendered important service in placing it within reach of students."—INDIAN DAILY NEWS.

"The author of the volume before us has done good service in compiling this Manual, in which the difficulties—and, it must be confessed, they are not a few—in mastering Arabic are reduced to a minimum."—BROAD ARROW.

Tea Cacoa, Cinchona, Coffee, Indiarubber, Sugar. Palms, Cotton, Cardamoms, Kola, Coca, Cinnamon, Nutmegs, Fibrous plants, and other Products suited for Cultivation in the Tropics.

[Published at Observer Office, Colombo, Ceylon, on or about the 1st of each month. Commenced in June, 1881.]

"THE TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST" has now an assured position in its large circulation in Ceylon, Southern and even Central and Northern India, the Straits Settlements, Sumatra, Java, Borneo, Northern Australia, Queensland, Central America, Natal, Mauritius, and the West Indies. From all sub-tropical planting settlements we have had cordial approval of the publication and an encouraging measure of support. The English, Indian, and Colonial Press have spoken in commendatory terms of the T. A., as also Directors of Public Gardens, from Sir Joseph Hooker, F.R.S., downwards, and so have all planters.

 No planter should be without it

THE "TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST."

As a medium for English, American, and Australian ADVERTISEMENTS of goods suitable for the tropics, India, as well as Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, Java, and West Indies (Central America being included in that term), or connected with agriculture, the TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST stands unrivalled, the work being constantly in the hands of Native as well as European and American agriculturists. Being a Monthly Periodical, the TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST lies on the table and is very often referred to during each month, a fact which advertisers will know how to appreciate.

Mr. W. T. Thiselton Dyer, F.L.S., C.M.G., Assistant Director of Kew Gardens, writing of the T. A., refers to it as "an astonishing repertory of everything relating to the economic botany of the East."

 For the sale of plants, seeds, machinery, implements, &c., used in tropical (tea, sugar, fibres, &c.) agriculture, no better advertising medium exists.

THE

BROAD ARROW

AND

ESTABLISHED 1833

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

'Th Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" nas acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION

INDIA.

HERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people is naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ARE THE CHEAPEST AND BEST.

TESTIMONIALS.

From R. NORMAN SHAW, Architect to the Royal Academy:—

29, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C.,
February 19 1884.

The "Æolus" Waterspray Company have fixed two Air Extractors and one Air Warmer in the Life School of the Royal Academy of Arts with, we all think, the happiest results. Our troubles with that school have always been very great, as owing to the amount of gas consumed, and the necessity of keeping the school well heated on account of the Nude Models, its tendency has been to get unbearably hot, and when windows were attempted to be opened the draughts were most dangerous. It is now kept at a pleasant even temperature, and there are no draughts. The reason for this is not difficult to find. The very hot air from the steam-pipes, and the fumes from the gas, are carried off as fast as they are generated, and a continual stream of warm fresh air being supplied, the school is kept comfortable.

(Signed) R. NORMAN SHAW, R.A., Architect.

Dear Sir,—We have pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of your "Invisible Roof Ventilators," which we fixed in above church with admirable results.—We are, yours faithfully,

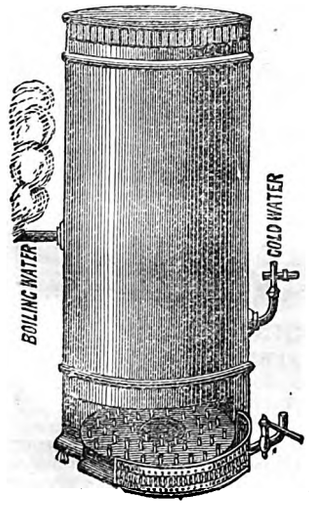
DIAMANTÉ BRILLIANTS.



The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS originally introduced into England by the SOLE AGENTS, Messrs. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established, and the success of their enterprise has surpassed their expectations. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS afford the only instance hitherto attained of the perfect representation of real Diamonds by artificial means. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real Diamonds of great value at the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grand monde and élite of society, and are now worn at the Court Balls and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly Diamond Ornaments, and can be worn at all times with confidence and security.

Every article is Mounted in 18-Carat Gold by the best Diamond Setters, exactly in the manner of the finest Brazilian Diamonds.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA,

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME of DIARRHŒA."

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Cholera's Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33 Gt. Russell St., W.C.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—DR. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Scene from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

The Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 28th October; from Allahabad and Madras to the 26th October; and from Calcutta to the 25th October.

H.E. the Viceroy is expected to leave Simla on the 3rd November.

The P. and O. steamer Victoria arrived in Bombay on Saturday morning, October 22, making the shortest passage between England and India on record.

Sir Alfred Lyall has arranged to leave Allahabab possibly on the evening of the 20th November, and certainly not later than the 21st.

Colonel Wallace returns from leave by the Victoria, and Mr. Horace Bell, who is now acting for him as Director, North-Western Railway, returns to his appointment on the Tirhoot Railway.

Dr. Pollen, Collector of Hyderabad, considers the line from Hyderabad to Umarkot a crying local want.

A notice in the Gazette of India has been published, sanctioning the survey of a railway line to Bannu, which is considered an indispensable adjunct to the strategic system.

Mr. Wynne, the Chief Engineer of the Bengal-Nagpur line, who arrived in Bombay by the Victoria, brought with him from England twenty-three Civil Engineers for service in the construction of the line.

Sir George White and Staff have returned to Mandalay from Bhamo.

Further reinforcements have been sent to Pagyee, where Major Kennedy and Captain Beville were killed.

In an attempted outbreak from Bassein jail three under-trial prisoners were killed and others wounded. Some members of the jail staff were also injured.

Major Kennedy, who was killed in action in Burma a short time ago, was for some years Assistant Adjutant-General of the Hyderabad Contingent, and had the reputation of being a gallant soldier.

Captain De Lassoe, who was associated with Sir West Ridgeway in the recent negotiations at St. Petersburg, has rejoined his appointment in the Foreign Office at Simla, after three years' absence on the Boundary Commission.

The total net decrease in the receipts from Indian railways, both guaranteed and State lines, from the 1st of April to the 10th of September this year, has been Rs. 17,69,646, while on the assisted companies and those in Native States there has been a net increase of Rs. 2,24,167.

It has been decided that the Allahabad University shall date its existence from the 15th of November. On that day, or as soon after it as possible, will be held the first meeting of the Senate, and the University will be formally opened by the Lieutenant-Governor.

Mr. Lambert, the Deputy Commissioner of Police, has been inspecting the Calcutta theatres with a view to suggesting any additional precautions that may be considered necessary against fire and fire alarms.

Surgeon-Major Hume, M.B., having returned from furlough, takes up his appointment as Civil Surgeon, Amraoti, and Surgeon Roe returns to his station, Yeotmahl. Mr. Callaghan, Civil Surgeon, Buldana District, proceeded on three months' privilege leave. Assistant Apothecary Montgomery will be his locum tenens.

The retirement of the Lord Bishop of Lahore will take place on December 21st.

Mr. J. G. M. Rennie, C.S., now at Hissar, has been selected to write the monograph on brass and copper ware for this year.

It is understood that the question of sending columns or parties of exploration into the little-known country between the Kurram and the Zhob has been decided in the negative, for this cold weather at any rate.

The net amount of Indian sea and land customs revenue for the first six months of the current official year, exclusive of the salt revenue, has amounted to Rs. 54,49,000, as compared with Rs. 49,45,000 during the corresponding period of last year.

More cases of cholera having occurred among the British troops at Mian Mir, the Northumberland Fusiliers will be railed two marches out en route to Rawal Pindi, halting ten days in camp.

Captain Sutherland, once of the Bengal Staff Corps, has returned to India and rejoined his post as Personal Secretary to the Minister of Hyderabad.

The Maharajah Holkar has contributed Rs. 500 to the Rukhmabai Defence Fund.

A marriage is arranged between Lord Herbrand Russell, aide-de-camp to the Viceroy, and Miss Tribe, daughter of the Acting Archdeacon of Lahore.

Captain Taylor, Port Officer of Madras, died on Oct. 21.

His Highness the Thakore Sahib of Gondal celebrated his 23rd birthday by remitting outstanding debts due to the State.

The Indian Telegraph Department is to be reorganised.

The Government of India has declined to sanction the survey of a railway between Hyderabad (Sind) and Pachpadra, and suggests a feeder line from the Indus to Mirpore Khas.

Colonel A. Toker succeeds Major Deane as first Deputy Secretary, Military Department, and is succeeded by Major A. D. Anderson as second Deputy Secretary.

Major Lord W. Beresford has been promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel.

A few of Ayoub's followers have drifted into Mashed, all telling the same story that his followers have been dispersed and that Ayoub is in hiding.

The troopship Malabar with reliefs arrived in Bombay on Thursday, Oct. 27.

The Pioneer holds that the ruling under the new warrant that no officer with less than three years' rank as Lieutenant-Colonel is to be considered eligible for Staff employment as assistant adjutant-general and posts higher than this, will affect the prospects of officers in India very materially indeed. "As a matter of fact the application of this provision of the warrant to India would result in a serious deterioration of the Staff, for the picked men who are now chosen for the Staff are, as a rule, well below the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. We venture to say that in no army in the world is so much attention paid to using good men just when they are at their best; whereas if the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel of three years' service in that grade is to be made a sine qua non for the important posts there will be such a small field for selection that the work cannot possibly be discharged efficiently. It may be all very well in England, where the duties in peace time are light and of the easiest routine kind, to have only senior officers on the Staff; but here in India the conditions are entirely different, and we want officers in their prime. The lessons taught by the Mutiny, where, in a few weeks, the old officers broke down and disappeared altogether giving place to younger men, should not be forgotten."

NOTES.

The surrender of Ayub Khan, which Lord Salisbury announced at the Mansion House dinner on Lord Mayor's day, is the most satisfactory information which has come from India for some time. He has been rather an expensive captive, having already before his escape cost the Indian Government some £50,000 paid to the Shah in order to keep him in a respectable position and safe custody. He will cost less as a prisoner in India, and he will have less chance of disturbing the peace. That is to say, if he be kept in India. It may be that influence will be brought to bear upon the Government by sentimentalists of the Wilfrid Blunt school, in which case Ayub may be transferred to England in time to become the lion of the London drawing-rooms next season.

Of course, Professor Vambéry improves the occasion by writing to the newspapers about it. When the news of Ayub's escape first reached him he immediately published a statement showing that Russia was at the bottom of the whole business, and that Muscovite statecraft and intrigue had quite outwitted British diplomacy. Now, when he hears that Ayub has surrendered, and that there is no trace forthcoming of Russia having had anything at all to do with his escape, the Professor praises Lord Dufferin for having managed matters so admirably. His Lordship, he says, "is without doubt by far the most sagacious, the ablest, and most courageous diplomatist of whom the England of to-day can boast. While maintaining the best relation with Abdurrahman he, at the same time, approaches his enemies and rivals with a view of securing British influence in Afghanistan, whatever might happen. His endeavours have now been crowned with brilliant success." M. Vambéry thinks that there have been secret negotiations between Ayub Khan and his brother, Yakub Khan, and that these have been winked at by Lord Dufferin, who "even had a long conference with Yakub Khan at Dehra Doon." This is a repetition of an old scandal which Professor Vambéry ought to have known was contradicated by all the Indian Press long ago.

However, it is reassuring to learn from the Professor that if England has sufficient courage and determination to support Lord Dufferin there is still time to baffle Russian designs on India :—

"England," he adds, "still disposes of sufficient power to check Muscovite designs in Inner Asia and to break the chain of causality which the St. Petersburg Cabinet has striven hard to establish between Sofia and Herat. Russia, to-day isolated in Europe, will not long hesitate to inflate herself in Asia. The Northern Bear, vexed at the Central European alliance, will henceforth growl on the left bank of the Oxus ; but England will no doubt profit by the advantages which she has meanwhile attained."

After this we may calm our fears and take a little rest from the wakefulness of Russophobism until the next alarm is manufactured.

Poor Dhulip Sing must have almost exhausted his stock of sensational surprises, which have been going off in India like damp fireworks. His latest telegram to the Nizam, telling him that he made a mistake in offering his money to the English, as Russia intends to take India, arrived a little too late except to create some merriment, no doubt, at the Hyderabad Court. "The inveterate foe" of England, as Dhulip now delights to call himself, must, we fancy, be getting a little chagrined at the want of sympathy which his Punjab "subjects" show towards him ; and after he has experienced, which he will do in time, Russian apathy and coldness too, he will perhaps return, if he can, to his English pheasant preserves and common sense.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times informs the readers of that journal by telegraph to-day that Sir Theodore Hope is not popular, but that no one can deny that he has energy. This is valuable news, and well worth its cost, of course. The correspondent praises the energy of the minister because it has been displayed in pushing on the Frontier railway schemes, some of which have met with considerable and not altogether undeserved opposition. He (writing from Calcutta) adds that :—

The one thing wanting to finish them, so far as they can be finished in existing circumstances, is their continuation to the actual frontier beyond the Khoja Amran range. It is now settled, so far as it can be settled in India, that the best line would be one running over and through the Khojak Pass. The advantages of the rival route vid Nushki are said to be problematical, since it would be quite as expensive as the first, 100 miles longer, and more exposed to attack, while its sole superiority would consist in its less steep gradients.

It is not stated how the money is to be found for these extensions.

The Mauritius papers seem by no means pleased at the prospect of the speedy return to the island as Governor of Sir John Pope Hennessy, and they laugh at the idea that he will make any change in his behaviour. They admit that Lord Onslow, in explaining his reinstatement as Governor in the House of Lords, said that Sir John had received a warning which no man could disregard. But, as one paper says, Sir John has received more warnings than most men, and there are few men who have paid so little attention to them. The same paper also says that if Sir Henry Holland expects that Sir John will bear carefully in mind the recommendations which have been given for his guidance, the chances are that Sir Henry will find himself mistaken.

The desire to "take care of Dowb" still survives, if the following from the Pioneer is to be believed. The custom remains ; the names only change.

General Dennehy, we learn from a trustworthy source, owed his C.I.E. to the direct interposition of the Queen with the Secretary of State for India, Her Majesty having being moved thereto by the Duke of Connaught, once the General's guest. The remaining link in the business may be left to surmise. No wonder the telegraph substituted "Donnelly" for Dennehy in announcing the decoration ; there was no record of any special service to this country to illumine the way to a more obvious recognition of the gallant General's identity.

The sporting papers of India have a serious grievance against the military authorities. They have discovered that the cold weather camps of exercise are the "bane" of racing. The Asian complains that "last season the various camps in Northern India necessitated the postponement of several sporting fixtures, and the year before the Delhi manœuvres not only led to the abandonment of many small race meetings, but interfered with the practice of the polo teams for Umballa." This complaint, which appears to be made in all gravity, and under a sense of deep wrong, has rather upset the gravity of some of the Asian's contemporaries, in one of which journals it is asked—What would be the effect of a war on Indian sport? It might put an end for the time to Gymkhanas altogether !

But the Pioneer comes to the rescue. It suggests that the authorities should convene a committee, consisting of a few sporting men, a bookmaker or two, and the writer of the irate observations we have quoted, to go into the matter, when a compromise might be effected and a cold weather programme made out, which, while "interfering in no way with the Indian turf, might still leave facilities" within reasonable limits for the assembling and exercise of troops. "Such a committee might often be able to give the adjutant-general useful advice regarding promotions and transfers, and prevent the removal of a sporting officer to a non-sporting station or vice versâ, and other such scandals which are now too frequent." The alternative of having the camps of exercise during the hot weather, so as not to interfere with the racing fixtures, might be a little hard on Tommy Atkins, lover of sport as he undoubtedly is.

But Tommy continues to be well cared for by those in authority over him in India. The various regimental institutions connected with his recreations are to be placed on a more comfortable footing, and generally improved. The canteen is to be remodelled and joined to the coffee-shop, the two together forming a refreshment department, with arrangements to enable the soldier to obtain a comfortable meal. The issue of raw spirits will be discouraged, and in the case of corps arriving now in India raw spirits will not be issued at any regimental refreshment bar for consumption in quarters unless diluted with water or ærated waters. In the "Regimental Institute" of the future a temperance room with a separate branch of the refreshment department is also to be established. Tommy Atkins in India, with all the care which is now being taken of his body, stomach, and mind, should be the model soldier of the world.

THERE have been some extraordinary feats of hard riding performed in England even since Nimrod rode and wrote, but the following record would be hard to beat:—

We have in past years had to record some hard riding done between Simla and Umballa; and we have now to add another to the list of "good times." Colonel Gatacre, Deputy Quarter-master-General, having laid a dâk of fourteen ponies left Simla at 5.15 A.M., arrived at Kalka at 10.15 A.M., and at Umballa at 2.30 on the afternoon of the same day. The distance actually covered was 96¾ miles. Between Kalka and Umballa he over-rode one dâk and had to go back to find the pony, which cost him twelve minutes' delay; while the average time taken in changing saddle was 2½ minutes for each of the thirteen ponies, which equals 32½ minutes. The total time not spent in the saddle was thus 44½ minutes, and the 96¾ miles were actually ridden in 8½ hours: good going certainly. Resting only an hour-and-a-half at Umballa Colonel Gatacre started back at 4 P.M. (lost 15 minutes' valuable time through a vicious pony), and arrived at Kalka at 8.15 P.M. Leaving there at 8.30 P.M. he reached Simla at 3.6 A.M. the next morning. Allowing the deduction for changes of saddle and the loss of 15 minutes the return journey was ridden in 10 hours 19 minutes. The 193½ miles were thus covered well within 22 hours, even with all halts and delays—a feat which, it is said, has never been done before.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, Nov. 13.

General Roberts has spent some days in the inspection of the garrisons and military works in Beloochistan. On the 6th inst. he and Sir Oliver St. John rode to Quetta from Gulistan. Next day the Commander-in-Chief held a parade of the Quetta garrison. The magnificent appearance of the King's Own Royal Lancaster Regiment and the Worcestershire Regiments, each over 700 strong, is said to have particularly struck his Excellency, especially as it afforded strong evidence of the present salubrity of Quetta. On Tuesday the Commander-in-Chief and Sir Oriel Tanner, commanding the district, inspected Pishin fort, garrisoned by the 19th Bombay Infantry. On the same afternoon the Quetta garrison marched out eight miles on the Candahar road and bivouacked for the night. On the following day General Roberts, Sir O. Tanner, and their staffs witnessed a series of manœuvres. His Excellency and Lady Roberts left the same evening by the Bolan railway for Kurrachee to meet the Viceroy.

Sir Theodore Hope, Minister of Public Works, has been inspecting the Hurnai and Bolan railways during the past week. He will leave India next month. During his visit he sanctioned the immediate completion of all the subsidiary works required to enable the Beloochistan railways to be worked up to full power should occasion rise.

The districts of Pishin, Thal Chotiali, and Sibi, which have been administered by us since 1879, have now been formally incorporated in British India, and constituted a Chief Commissionership under the name of British Beloochistan, the Governor-General's agent at Quetta being Chief Commissioner.

The first halt in the course of the Viceroy's winter tour was made at Kapurthalla, where the members of the party arrived on the afternoon of the 4th inst., the Rajah meeting them at the frontier. The greater part of their stay there was devoted to shooting, but the usual formal visits were interchanged, various public works were inspected, and other business was transacted. Lady Dufferin had an interview with the ladies of the zenana, who presented her with a handsome gift for her Female Medical Aid Fund. The Rajah's preparations for his guests appear to have been made on a sumptuous scale.

Lord Dufferin left on Tuesday evening, and proceeded to Kurrachee, where he arrived on Friday afternoon. Replying to an address of welcome presented by the municipality, the Viceroy referred to the recently much-debated question of railway communication between Kurrachee and Northern India. No one, he said, could help sympathising with the desires of the people of Scinde in this matter. But in a subject so technical as that of the cost and profit of the suggested lines, he was naturally disposed to be guided by the views of the specialists whose duty it was to advise the Government on such points. Moreover, the powers of the Indian Government as to expenditure on railways and the granting of guarantees were strictly limited, and it was hampered by the necessity for maintaining a continuity of policy in the completion of certain famine lines. There also lay upon it the obligation of providing railways for Burma. He would, however, be happy to receive information regarding the aspirations and wants of Kurrachee

The Viceroy will, after all, pay a flying visit to Quetta. He will arrive in Sibi on Wednesday, go up the Khojak next day, and to Quetta on the same evening, returning to Sibi on Friday.

In connection with the Viceroy's Kurrachee speech it may be mentioned that the refusal of the Government to sanction the proposed railway between that town and Upper India, known as the Hyderabad-Pachpadra scheme, has been severely criticised on all sides, more especially since it has been discovered that by a mistake in the calculation the cost of this scheme was over-estimated by seventy lakhs.

The Government has at last pronounced a decision on the question of the proposed railway from Umballa to Kalka and Simla. It is not prepared to construct the line as a State railway or to offer any guarantee or subsidy to private enterprise. But if any substantial private company is disposed to embark in the undertaking the Government will permit the construction on terms similar to those granted to the Tarkeshur Railway Company or to the Bengal and North-Western Company.

On October 29 a party of the Abors, an aboriginal tribe beyond the Assam frontier, made a raid across the border and attacked a Duffla village near the Harmutty tea-garden. They carried away eleven persons, three of whom are known to have been afterwards murdered. A woman who escaped states that all the captives are cruelly treated. Messengers have been sent to the Abor villages with a message demanding the immediate release of the surviving captives and requiring the chiefs to come in and explain their conduct, but no active steps have yet been taken to punish the raiders.

A fire broke out in the North-Western Provinces secretariat offices at Allahabad last Sunday morning. A great part of the building was completely destroyed, and a mass of valuable records was burnt. Fortunately very many of these records exist in duplicate elsewhere, so that the actual loss is not very great, although it will cause much temporary inconvenience. A local newspaper states that the most serious disaster is the destruction of all the papers relating to the Sardah Canal project scheme for irrigating Oude. The building itself, too, was comparatively new, and cannot be rebuilt without heavy outlay. The origin of the fire is wrapped in mystery, but suspicions of incendiarism appear to be entertained. The Municipality is blamed for not providing a sufficient supply of water.

The Bengal Board of Revenue, reporting on the first year's working of the Bengal Tenancy Act, says that a sufficient time has not yet elapsed to admit of a decided expression of opinion and adds that it is doubtful whether its provisions are yet sufficiently appreciated by either landlords or tenants. The local officers, however, are almost unanimous in considering the measure an improvement. The Board remarks that if the fears of the opponents of this Act have not been realised, neither has it proved an immediate panacea for all the difficulties which surround the relations of landlord and tenant.

The details of Ayoob Khan's surrender are not yet known, but it is stated that it was brought about mainly through Sirdar Hashim Khan, son of Mahomed Sharif Khan, who has been living as a refugee in Persia since General Roberts defeated Ayoob in September, 1880. The news has been received with general satisfaction, and a hope is expressed on all sides that the Government will detain him in India for the future.

AFGHANISTAN.

Southern Afghanistan remains quiet, and now that there is no danger of Ayoob appearing on the scene it will probably continue so, at least till the spring, when the Ghilzai rebellion may possibly break out again. It is to be hoped, however, that the Ameer, being relieved from the fear of a rival, will not renew his severities, which he has recently somewhat relaxed. Meanwhile, winter having set in, the Ameer's troops have been withdrawn to Ghazni and other strongholds. Sadu, a notorious Ghilzai robber chief, is said to have lately died of fever, and it is reported that the disaffected tribes are greatly weakened by the departure of certain sections.

By the death of the Earl of Carnwath, who was a retired colonel of the Hon. East India Company's Bengal Artillery, the title devolves upon his nephew, Lieut.-Colonel Robert Harris Carnwath Dalzell, formerly major in the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders who becomes 12th Earl of Carnwath, in the peerage of Scotland. The new Scotch peer is the eldest son of the late colonel the Hon. R. A. G. Dalzell, C.B., some time of the 63rd Foot and Grenadier Guards, by his marriage in 1846 with Sarah Bushby, eldest daughter of Mr. John Harris, of Eldon House, London, Canada West, and was born on July 1, 1847, being therefore in his 41st year.

FOUR WEEKS A PRISONER AMONG DACOITS.

(Pioneer.)

I am a Native of India, and came over to Burma about eighteen months ago as a follower in the Indian army. At the beginning of August last I left my fort with the intention of going down to a post on the Irrawaddy, and I travelled alone on foot and unarmed. I was caught the same day, as I was going along the road, by three Burman dacoits, who jumped on me from the jungle, and wounded me on the head with dahs, tied my arms behind my back with a cloth, and took me away to their Boh or chief, who was about a mile off in the jungle.

I found the Boh seated under a tree, surrounded by seven Burmese women—his wives. He had a small tent pitched behind him, and was drinking a liquor called "shumshoo" with his wives. The dacoit band, numbering 45 or 50 men, were lying down, sleeping or eating in the jungle around; one man being posted as sentry, up a tamarind tree among the branches, with a bamboo horn in his hand to sound in a case of alarm. Each dacoit was armed with a cap gun and a dah; and I noticed two spare guns. The Boh had a double-barrelled gun, which opened in the middle into two parts (a breechloading fowling-piece). The dacoits had a good supply of caps and powder, and the villagers gave them lumps of lead which they cut with dahs and hammered into bullets.

The Boh, on my appearing before him, asked me why I was travelling alone and unarmed. I answered that I was leaving the Government service, and was on my way to the Irrawaddy. The Boh then said he would not kill me, but would keep me on as his servant, to look after his pony, and to draw water for himself and for his wives. He did not specify the amount of pay he proposed giving me. I was then searched for money, and had all my clothes taken off and was given some new Burmese clothes and some "shumshoo" and food. My hair, moustache, and beard were shaved off. The dacoit band then gathered round me, and I treated them to some Hindustani music, accompanying myself on a Burmese musical instrument, at which the dacoits laughed immoderately. We stayed in this camp that night; the next morning we moved off through the jungle about four miles, and again encamped. We obtained supplies from the villages near which we passed. The Boh used to send a few armed men into the village requisitioning all he required under pain of firing the houses. We never stayed in one camp more than one day or night, but were constantly on the move. No fires nor lights of any description, nor smoking even, was allowed in camp after dark.

The dacoits appeared to be in great fear of the Indian troops (Kullars); and whenever they heard of any in the vicinity, they at once moved away to dense jungle, far away from roads and villages. They then put on additional look-out men, and sent out spies. About 12 dacoits were, I think, Chin Mussulmans; they wore loose pujamahs like the Chinese, and prayed aloud three times a day, spreading out mats to pray on. They only spoke Burmese, but the Boh knew a little Hindustani, and he alone could converse with me, as I do not speak Burmese. The Boh gave me a spear and dah; and on the march I went behind him with the other dacoits. The order of march used to be—first three dacoits, well pushed forward, then the Boh; after him his wives, and, lastly, the main body of the dacoits. I was some four weeks with the dacoits and was treated throughout with great kindness by the Boh. When I was brought in wounded, he abused the men who had captured me for striking me. I always slept near the Boh's tent, away from the other dacoits. He fed me well, gave me "shumshoo" to drink, and offered me a wife.

During the time I was with the dacoits no prisoners were killed, but a few villages were burnt. These villages, on being requisitioned, refused to comply, and produced some recent Government Proclamation, saying that they were not allowed to harbour or help dacoits. The Boh got much enraged on reading these papers; he tore them in pieces, stamped on them, and then fired the village.

One night the Boh heard that the Kullars, or Government troops, had left a large post almost defenceless, and had marched out to attack some other dacoits. He at once decided to attack and burn the post; and I was sent with twenty dacoits to do this. We went to within half a mile of the post, arriving at midnight. We crept silently into a phoongyee kyoung enclosure. The dogs began to bark, and the phoongyees and boys awoke. A few of the dacoits then went upstairs into the kyoung and questioned the phoongyees. They were told that there was a large force of Indian troops in the post, and they asked us to leave the kyoung. We at once acted on this advice and left. Soon after this I was sent with four Burman dacoits to steal toddy. We got separated doing this, and I then managed to effect my escape, and got back to my post.

THE DEATH OF LADY BRASSEY.

(Indian Spectator.)

When last we wrote of Lady Brassey, a few weeks back, we little feared she was going to leave the Sunbeam for good, although in her letter she complained of "very indifferent health," owing to the cold climate of Australia at the time of the year, and that she "never could stand cold well." We had every hope that she would regain strength in the warmer latitude she was nearing. But it has been ordered otherwise, and the world loses by Lady Brassey's untimely removal one of the brightest, cheeriest, and most useful votaries of duty. Her place in literature and society will never again be adequately filled. To many of the gifts and graces of her sex Lady Brassey joined an intellectual keenness and warmth which made her books, like her life, a peculiarly healthy and interesting study for others. Great was her thirst after knowledge, but no greater than her power to utilise it to good purpose. In running over India she managed to pick up a variety of useful information at first hand. At Lahore, Delhi, Agra, Lucknow, Benares, and other centres she had offers of official aid, but while availing herself of these to some extent Lady Brassey preferred Native conversation and guidance; and the friends we had asked to wait upon her wrote highly of her quick intelligence and cosmopolitan sympathy. She was herself charmed with her visit to India. In Bombay it is well known that the brief sojourn of Lord and Lady Brassey was a daily round of beneficent activity. The trip to Janjira, Rutnagherry and Goa was much enjoyed except for the sad incident at the last-named place, which had a very depressing effect on the mistress of the Sunbeam. Equally well enjoyed was the voyage further on till Australia was reached. It was here that she complained latterly of the inclemency of the weather, but she was in excellent spirits and looked forward to much literary work and the marriage of her eldest daughter on returning home. Those hopes and aspirations are now at an end, and what remains of one of the cleverest English travellers lies buried at sea in a distant corner of the globe. The manner of her death appears to be in keeping with her own wishes, but it is hard for others to realise such a fate for one so full of life and animation. Lady Brassey's death is a great blow to her husband, and it may interfere with the truly patriotic labours upon which he has embarked. Lord Brassey and his family need hardly be assured of deep sympathy from India.

MEAT BISCUITS FOR CAMPAIGNS.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The Commissary-General-in-Chief has attempted nothing beyond the manufacture of a simple meat biscuit under the auspices of Major Hobday and Lieutenant Tyler, who first took bread, meat, fresh beef, suet, fresh potatoes, compressed vegetables, sugar, black pepper and dried tamarinds, made there from what is described as, and certainly should have been, "a very palatable biscuit." The addition of gram-flour, onions and curry-powder, and the withdrawal of the vegetables and the tamarind produced "a nice crisp biscuit fit to be eaten without further preparation, but best prepared by boiling in water with salt and a little pepper." In some cases the biscuits had been kept for at least three months before Major Hobday and Lieutenant Tyler began to eat them, and in no case is there a hint of their having turned mouldy. Other biscuits of practically the same composition were left in an open box for six months throughout the rainy season and then distributed to two British regiments, who said that they were palatable. Colonel Hawkes holds that half a pound of meat biscuit with half a pound of ordinary biscuit should be equal in nutritive value to one pound of fresh meat and one pound of bread. The estimate appears to us a sanguine one; and even admitting that the sustaining qualities are as marked as Colonel Hawkes thinks, one of the first things that the soldier demands in his food is bulk—he insists upon liberally filling his inside. The medical officer at Umballa considers the biscuits should be very useful on active service as a stand-by in case of shortness of supplies. This is as much as can be expected.

PILGRIMAGES.

(Bombay Gazette.)

Devout Hindoos, wishing to propitiate their gods and secure future blessedness wash away their sins in the waters of sacred rivers, or make long pilgrimages to famous shrines. As tokens of religious zeal and piety on the part of the pilgrims these trying and tedious journeys may possibly have something to recommend them; but unfortunately, they are a standing menace to the public health and on that ground Government, however desirous they may be of respecting the religious prejudices of all classes of the community, cannot but regard them with real concern and anxiety. Many thousands of pilgrims assemble annually at these shrines, where the laws of sanitation are but little understood. The consequence is that cholera and other diseases are hatched, and soon take wing, carrying death to many remote villages. Many thousand deaths are every year a direct result of the pilgrimage to Puri, and there can be little doubt that the pilgrimages to less famous shrines are equally disastrous in their effects. One of the most celebrated shrines in Rajputana is that of Pushkar near Ajmere, where thousands of Hindoos, from far and near attend a fair which is annually held there. Last year Rajputana, in common with other parts of the country, enjoyed immunity from cholera; but unfortunately the disease made its appearance at Pushkar during the fair, and not only carried off a large number of victims in the immediate locality, but spread over a wide area of the surrounding districts, making great havoc in the country villages. Cholera has been prevalent in the province for the past three or four months, and lately some cases have occurred near the sacred shrine at Pushkar. To prevent as far as possible the spread of the disease, the Commissioner of Ajmere-Merwara has warned the public that it may be necessary to prohibit the hold of the fair this year; which under ordinary circumstances would begin on Sept. 27th. The fact that, owing to condition approaching a drought, the water in the sacred bathing tank is lower than it has been many years past may assist in deterring those who contemplate visiting Pushkar from undertaking the pilgrimage this year.

THE OPIUM REVENUE.

(Pioneer.)

The note of alarm sounded in Bombay regarding the Opium Revenue is, unhappily, one that the Government at least have been expecting for some time past. The steady downfall in prices, due, partly, to the absolute increase in the tax on Indian opium in China under the Chefoo Convention (amounting now to 80 taels on a chest of 100 catties), and also to the steady increase in local production and improvement in the quality of the Chinese drug, has undoubtedly seriously affected the revenue derivable by the Indian Government. These are matters beyond the control of India, and they must be accepted with as good a grace as is possible under the circumstances. The Anti-Opium League at home will, of course, hail with delight any indication that the Government monopoly of opium in India is in bad case, but they will carefully veil the fact that the consumption in China is steadily on the increase and that the poppy is being widely cultivated there. The Chinese people will have their opium, whether it comes from India or is grown in their own country; and this being so we must merely look at the traffic from a commercial standpoint. The Indian exchequer would be hopelessly insolvent if the revenue derived from opium was suddenly cut off; it is suffering even now from the action of China, where the authorities wink at the growth and manufacture of the drug; but we can expect no sympathy from the fanatical philanthropists who wish to pose as the saviours of the Chinese race. The Indian Government will have seriously to consider whether cheaper methods of manufacture cannot be devised, so that the drug exported to China may be able to compete successfully with that produced locally. The solution of this question of competition is by no means an easy matter, for little or no pressure can be exerted on the Pekin authorities; and it is quite clear from recent evidence that the cultivation of the poppy is extending with amazing rapidity in many parts of China. The Indian drug still holds its own for purity and strength, but these qualities alone cannot make it supreme in the Chinese markets. With a vast popular consumption of the element of cheapness comes in, and it is to this point that the Government will have to direct their attention. The outlook is one that must naturally cause anxiety to our financiers; but they are fully aware of the difficulties facing them, and they are not likely to let the Indian drug be driven out of China without a great struggle.

THE PUNJAB SILK INDUSTRY.

(Times of India.)

AN interesting monograph on the silk industry in the Punjab has been published by the local Government. The general conclusion arrived at is that the only part of the province which seems fairly suited by climatic conditions for the cultivation of the silkworm consists of the low outer ranges of the Himalayas, and a strip of country immediately below them. And even in this district it is noted that almost the only people who have taken to the industry are emigrants from Cashmere, who have brought the traditions with them from their old country. The tenor of the report is to show that the silk industry of the Punjab has declined during recent years; silk fabrics are much less worn by the well-to-do classes than they were in Sikh times, European cotton-goods and broadcloth having largely taken their place. The silk-worm rearing seems to be carried on in quite a desultory fashion, being taken up rather as a means of adding a few rupees to the income of the household without incurring much outlay or involving much trouble than as an earnest of means of livelihood. As the report states:—"The rearing of the silkworm requires considerable care and constant attention. Airy sheds, perfect cleanliness, fresh food, and a tolerably even temperature are among the chief requirements, and it is owing to the want of these that so small a measure of success is obtained among Native rearers. The worms, unless kept perfectly clean, are liable to epidemics which carry them off in large numbers; excessive heat also develops in them a kind of apoplexy which is invariably fatal." However, with an ordinary amount of care, a very marked improvement in the character of the silk that can be reared in the province has been noted. This fact has to be impressed on the growers, as sericulture on a large scale, with considerable capital and the use of machinery, has not so far seemed to have proved a success, and the only chance seems to be to try and improve the cottage industry. Coming to the manufacturing part of the subject, we learn that the local supply of raw silk falls short of the requirements of the manfacturing centres, the chief of which are Umritsur, Lahore, Mooltan, and Jullundur. The raw silk that is imported into the Punjab comes principally from three sources—(1) from Bengal, (2) from China by Bombay, (3) from Yarkand and Bokhara. The total annual value of the silk goods manufactured in the province, including pure silk goods and mixtures of silk and cotton, is about 25 to 30 lakhs per annum, but there is every evidence that the industry is steadily declining.

BENGAL.

On Saturday afternoon, Oct. 22, the battery landed their field guns from the brig Chinsurah, and took them to their winter quarters in the Fort. At 4-30 p.m. punctually the detachment fell in at Fort Point, and were thence marched into the fort, and the limbers were dragged out and brought up opposite the brig. The men then proceeded on board, where the necessary tackle was rigged, and everything put in readiness for the work in hand. A large horse barge was next brought alongside, and the carriages were first hoisted and lowered into it, followed by the guns, which were then lowered on to their carriages. The barge was then brought to the river bank, and moored end on; the limbers were run down, the guns limbered up, and hauled up the steep incline, a gradient of about one in two feet. The whole detachment was then marched into the Fort, where the guns were housed. The battery deserves credit for the smart seamanlike manner in which the whole of this work was carried out. The business of landing these guns is by no means an easy one, and the amount of hard pulling required is something prodigious; but the members of the battery acquitted themselves exceedingly well and got through their work with the celerity and finish of regulars. There was a very large gathering of spectators on the banks, and a naval entertainment was provided for those who were taking their evening drive on the Strand.

Tenders have been accepted by the Eastern Bengal State Railway for the construction of a bridge at mile 57, and contractors will shortly be asked to submit offers for the construction of two more bridges at mile 55 and 60. The diversion for the bridge at mile 57 has been commenced, and hopes of its completion by the end of the month are entertained, when the bridge construction proper starts. The girders are 30 feet span and are supplied by the well-known firm of Hawkes, Crawshaw and Company. The bridges are very much needed, and it is to be hoped that the extra waterway will prevent any further breaches of the line from floods. The E.B.S.R. has had a most favourable season. There have been no floods, and the traffic has been very brisk. If the employés have been a little overworked, they can at least console themselves with the fact that the bonus added to their Provident Fund will recompense them for the extra hours and no pay.

MADRAS.

THE Madras Government have been requested by the Calcutta authorities for the future, to arrange for the selection of fuel and fodder reserves in making surveys of, and deciding upon, the allignment of all projected State Railway lines in this Presidency. In addition to the stations it has already been decided upon to have on the Calicut Extension of the Madras Railway a station, to be opened at the 402nd mile equidistant between the Perpanangadi and Ferok Stations, to meet the wishes of the people of the Malabar district, who, some time ago, memorialised Government on the subject.

A SUGGESTION has been made to the Director of Public Instruction in Madras by the Professors of the Medical College that, with a view of affording greater facilities for the clinical training of male and female students, a ward should be opened out at the General Hospital for the reception of women and children. Were a measure of the kind carried out it would certainly be a convenience to the residents of Black-town, to whom the distance of the present Women and Children's Hospital is considerable. The suggestion has not yet been put before Government.

THE Madras Government have approved of the proposals of the Inspector-General of Jails for revising the establishment of the European prison and subjail at Ooty. The total cost of the new establishment will be Rs 357 monthly, or Rs. 4,284 annually, which will give Rs. 238 as the average cost of establishment per head on the maximum number of prisoners intended to be accommodated in the European prison. The Government observe that the establishment, as shown above, has been calculated on a maximum of eighteen prisoners in the European prison, but the Inspector-General is not to assume that none in excess of that number will ever be sent there, nor to keep back prisoners otherwise eligible for Ooty merely because the upper story of the Jail is already filled.

THE death is announced of John Henry Taylor, Lieutenant in the Royal Naval Reserve, and Port Officer of Madras. The deceased was sixty-five years old, and had been ailing from dropsy ever since his return from England at the end of July last. He proceeded to England, on deputation for a few months, in connection with the discussion regarding a North-Eastern opening to the Madras Harbour, and after his return he attended office for about two weeks, and then took to his bed. Captain Taylor was appointed Master Attendant of Madras on April 21, 1874, on the retirement from that office of Captain H. D. E. Dalrymple. Captain Taylor before his appointment was the Commander of the steamer Viceroy, one of Greens' new vessels that had been built expressly for the Suez Canal route, which was then recently opened. Captain Taylor was specially selected for the appointment by his Excellency Lord Hobart, the then Governor of Madras, and his appointment was confirmed by the Marquis of Salisbury, the then Secretary of State for India. During his whole tenure of office, Captain Taylor took no leave whatever. He was sent home to England on deputation twice, the last occasion being in connection with the discussion as to the North-Eastern entrance to the Harbour. Shortly after assuming office, Captain Taylor delivered a public lecture on the Law of Storms which has ever since been annually printed in the Lawrence Asylum Press Almanac. The deceased took an active interest in the harbour works from their commencement, and it was owing to his suggestions to Government that the Port Trust was established. He was also deeply interested in the welfare of all the ports on the Coast, making an inspection of each annually. The designation of Master Attendant was changed by Government to that of Port Officer at the beginning of last year. Captain Taylor was also a Municipal Commissioner at the time of his death, having served as such for a number of years.

BOMBAY.

MR. PARSONS is to act as Judge of Ratnagiri, vice Mr. Shripad Babaji Takur, transferred to Broach, and Mr. Moscardi, Assistant Judge of Ratnagiri, vice Mr. Courtenay, gone home on furlough.

IT is understood that Brigadier General La Touche, Commanding at Aden, will revert to his substantive appointment, that of Cantonment Magistrate, Poona, on being relieved by Brigadier-General Hogg, on or about the 25th Oct.

MR. CORDERY, being still in ill-health, proceeds on a month's leave from the 1st of November. Major Robertson will officiate for him during his absence. Mr. Cornish is timed to return on the 24th and will take up the duties of 2nd Assistant.

The Bombay Corporation decided, on the motion of Captain Selby, to forward to Government the letter from the General Committee of the Corporation, embodying their views on the Municipal Bill, together with the amendments proposed by them. In laying his motion before the meeting, Captain Selby made a long speech in condemnation of the retrograde nature of the Bill. Colonel Merewether moved a number of amendments to the letter and the Bill, but they were all thrown out by very large majorities. Some of the amendments did not even find a seconder. At the conclusion of the debate, the Chairman, Sir Henry Morland, spoke in terms of warm approbation of the services rendered to the Corporation by Captain Selby, as chairman of the General Committee that had been appointed to consider and report on the Bill.

SIR SALAR JUNG IN BOMBAY.—Sir Salar Jung returned to Bombay on Saturday, by the mail steamer Victoria after an absence of six months in Europe. Of this period it appears Sir Salar spent a little more than a month in the Bosphorus, and then by way of Varna visited Vienna, where he sojourned a week, being very much interested in the Viennese and the Austrians generally. After staying in Berlin for a few days, he left for England, arriving there just in time for Goodwood races, which he enjoyed perhaps more than anything else at home. He rented a villa close to the racecourse, and during the meeting entertained a very pleasant party of English friends. On arriving in Bombay Harbour Sir Salar Jung was met by Mr. Dinshaw Muncherjee Punthakee, Mr. Kaikoobad Cowasjee, and Mr Nusserwanjee Jamsetjee Mehta. Then, accompanied by Mr. Moreton Frewen, Private Secretary; Mr. G. Rock, London Agent; Mr. Liakat Ali, Aide-de-Camp; Mr. Tofer Ali Beg, Mr. Fider Ali, and Mr. Aga Mirza, French and Persian Interpreter, Sir Salar left the Bunder, where he had been received by Messrs. Adamjee, Peerbhoy, Ibrahimbhoy Nooroodin, Vulibhoy Khanbhoy, Cowasjee Dinshaw Adenwalla, and others, for the Great Western Hotel, where arrangements had been made for the Nawab's accommodation. It is probable that Sir Salar Jung will spend a few days in Bombay.

RETURN OF THE RAO OF CUTCH.—Among the eminent persons who arrived in Bombay by the Victoria was the Rao of Cutch. The time for his Highness's landing had been fixed by the authorities at 4 30 P.M., when a guard of honour had been detached to parade at the bunder, and a salute was ordered to be fired from the saluting battery. Soon after the Victoria anchored, three members of the Rao's suite proceeded on board. They were followed by a deputation, consisting of Mr. Kennedy, as the representative of Government; Rama Jalamsingjee, His Highness's father-in-law; Mr. Motilal Lalbhai, the Dewan; Mr. Choonilal Sarabhai, Dewan of Edur; Mr. Chotalal Sevakram, his Highness the Rao's Private Secretary; Mr. Mansookram Soorujram, Mr. Vundravandas, Purshotumdas, and others. It appeared that, instead of waiting to receive the customary honours of a guard and a salute, the Rao determined to land at once. This he did about 9.30 A.M. He was attended by Colonel Goodfellow, the Political Agent; Prince Kalooba, his Highness's brother; Mr. Purbhoodas Moolchand, Secretary; and Mr. Dorabjee Hormusjee. Accompanied by Colonel Goodfellow, Prince Kalooba, and the Dewan, his Highness drove over in a carriage and pair to the bungalow of the late Hon. Morarjee Goculdas, Pedder Road, Cumballa Hill, where he resides temporarily.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

SOME proposals are at present under the consideration of the authorities at Simla to divide the forests in the North-West Provinces and Oudh into two instead of three Conservatorships, with the object of making the Dehra Dun Forest School into a distinct charge.

IN consequence of the confirmation of Mr. J. P. Hewett as Under-Secretary to the Government of India in the Home Department, Mr. Daukes, now on special duty with the Public Service Commission, is left, officially speaking, in the air. Advantage, however, will be taken of Mr. Cornwall's retirement to restore Mr. Daukes to his place in the Civil List of the North-West Provinces, though his eventual destination is understood to be Assam.

INQUIRY into the causes of a serious derailment that recently took place on the South Indian Railway having conclusively showed that it was due to modifications and alterations that had been introduced in this country of designs that had been approved of in England, strict injunctions have been issued by Government to the railway officers concerned that no alterations or deviations from approved designs should be carried out in this country, except with the approval of the Company's Consulting Engineer in England.

REGARDING the appointments to the fifth Judgeship in the Chief Court of the North-West Provinces nothing can be formally decided until intelligence is received from England as to whether the appointment will be permanent or temporary, as on this the value of the post largely, of course, depends. It is understood that both the Legal Member and Sir Charles Aitchison are in favour of the fifth Judgeship being made permanent.

BURMA.

THE Rangoon Gazette correspondent telegraphs from Alon, Chindwin District, that a man named Moung Tha Gyee, formerly made a district head constable, turned traitor and became so active a dacoit that an expedition was sent to punish him. He was found in a strongly entrenched position at Chounga village, midst dense jungle. At night a small party of mounted infantry and military police rushed into the dacoit camp, and six prisoners twenty standards, and a large number of arms were captured, but Moung Tha Gyee escaped. On the return journey eight men of the attacking party got separated from the remainder, when the dacoits attacked them, killed one, and wounded three.

A DESERVING OFFICER.—The following is an extract from Regimental Orders by Colonel G. Sartorius, Commandant 1st Biluch Regiment:—"Camp Pynmana, U.B.F.F., Oct. 5, 1887. The commanding officer having to-day heard of the death of Surgeon B. N. Koyajee, desires to place on record his great regret at the loss the regiment has sustained. The steady, cool courage he showed during the outbreak of cholera at Jacobabad, Sind, in 1885, and when, under a close fire from the enemy, he attended a wounded man, came under the personal notice of the commanding officer, and was the subject of a special report to the Brigadier-General Commanding. Surgeon Koyajee's determined endurance on long marches under very trying circumstances is well known. To soldierly qualities he added great professional abilities and a kindness of heart that made his fellow-officers his personal friends."

A PRETTY squabble is that which has agitated society at the usually quiet Himalayan station of Murree, and of which some mention has already been made in the newspapers. Usually when a lady delights an audience with her acting, bouquets of flowers are showered upon her; but at the Murree Theatre the other day, when the Rosa Towers Company was in possession of the boards, a number of high-spirited young officers came loaded with garlands of fruit and vegetables, which they proposed to award according to the merits of the players. Miss Rosa Towers and her companion, however, did not appreciate a compliment of so dubious a character, and the result was that they fell out with their audience.

BOMBAY AND MANCHESTER YARNS.

The official review of the foreign trade of India during the twelve months ended on March 31 last, prepared by Mr. J. E. O'Conor, is an interesting document. It shows that of the whole foreign seaborne trade of India, exports and imports of both merchandise and treasure included, the share of the United Kingdom was 54·88 per cent., China (including Hong Kong) took 11·08 per cent., and Straits Settlements 3·65 per cent.

Mr. O'Conor refers to the recent rapid growth in the exports of yarn spun in the Indian mills to China and Japan. The progress during the past ten years in the shipments of both yarns and piece goods is shown in the following table:—

Exports of Indian Cotton Yarn and Cloth.

	Yarn. Millions of Pounds.	Cloth. Millions of Yards.
1887-8	15,600	17,545
1878-9	21,332	22,517
1879-80	25,862	25,800
1880-1	26,901	30,424
1881-2	30,786	29,911
1882-3	45,378	41,583
1883-4	49,876	55,613
1884-5	65,879	47,968
1886-7	91,804	53,405

The greater part of the yarns exported goes to China and Japan, and Mr. O'Conor discusses the alleged stimulus given to this trade in competition with English exports of yarn to those countries through the higher value of the sovereign as shown in the heavy fall in English prices and in the Eastern exchanges. He says:—"In both China and Japan, as has been pointed out before, the competition of Bombay with Lancashire twist is increasingly successful. Some attribute the success to the operation of exchange, but this is very doubtful. Better reasons can be found in the intrinsic merits of the article, and its adaptability to the purposes for which Chinamen and Japanese require twist, and in the facts that the raw material has no long freight charges to pay between the field and the mill, and that the freight of the twist from Bombay is lower than from Liverpool, to say nothing of the labour by which it is made being cheaper." The advantages which India possesses in regard of freight are obvious enough, but that alleged to arise from cheaper labour is disputed. Moreover, India has some disadvantages, such as the heavy first cost of machinery and the dearness of coal. But the question appears to be not only one affecting the relative position of the spinner at present with regard to these items, but what has happened to cause an expansion during the past ten or twelve years in the shipments of yarn to the Far East at a rate exceeding enormously that previously observable? This question of the causes and circumstances of the displacement of Lancashire by Indian yarn in China and Japan is now being investigated by the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, and we may hope that before long all doubt and dispute about it will be set at rest.

THE LATE LADY BRASSEY.—Letters received from the Sunbeam show that Lady Brassey's health was a source of anxiety so far back as August 31st, when the yacht was at Thursday Island. The trip up the Queensland Coast had been one of the most pleasant experiences in the whole course of the present voyage of the famous yacht, but Lady Brassey had already contracted the fever which was soon after to terminate fatally. In a letter from Thursday Island a correspondent on board the Sunbeam writes to the Bombay Gazette:—"Lady Brassey has been and still is very ill; and it is now a question whether we shall be able to carry out the programme which we have mapped out for ourselves. It is our intention to go on from here to Port Darwin, and then after a few days' stay, to admit of excursions being made to places of interest in the neighbourhood, to sail for Mauritius. We expect to be able to traverse the distance between the capital of the Northern Territory of South Australia and Port Louis in about three weeks, but owing to Lady Brassey's illness it is a question whether we shall be able to visit Africa as we proposed doing. If her health does not improve we shall probably go home from Mauritius in one of the French mail steamers viâ the Suez Canal. In any case we shall not go home from the Cape in the Sunbeam, but in a Union Company's steamer."

THE CULTIVATION OF CINCHONA.

Mr. von Winning writes further on the subject of the low prices of cinchona to the Indische Mercuur. "Perhaps, in many cases, the small alloy of sulphate was not known, perhaps now and then the continually declining prices were the reason that bark was brought in auction which yielded less than the costs of gathering, packing, shipping, and selling;" ofttimes, however, the reason will have been an inexact calculation of costs. Every manager ought to calculate with the greatest accuracy the costs falling directly on the harvest.

When the total amount per kilogram (or half-kilogram) of bark for the estate has been established, those barks whose value, according to the market price, does not exceed this figure, ought not to be harvested at all. The harvesting thereof results inevitably in loss. This is so manifest that probably nobody will be able to deny it. When, nevertheless, the manager of the estate has not made accurate calculations, the proprietors must inevitably lose. But in many cases the sale of a shipment of bark will seemingly yield a profit, though it might have been better not to have harvested the whole quantity, if one had rightly considered one's interests.

An instance in figures will illustrate this better, let us suppose as the market price of the bark 15 cents unit per kilogram, and further, that the abovementioned direct harvesting costs, for a certain estate, amount to 30 cents per kilogram. This estate now harvests, by lopping and thinning, from a still young Ledger plantation, 8,000 kilograms of bark, including young stems, thick branches, and thin twigs.

When all is mixed, this gives an average alloy of sulphate of 2¼ per cent., and thus, at the sale, yields a profit, above the direct cost of harvesting, &c., of 8,000 (f.33¾.30), equal f.300. The shipment, however, is in reality by no means composed of a homogeneous mass, with an alloy of 2¼ per cent., but of various barks of very different value, ranging from 4 per cent. down to ½ per cent., 4,000 kilograms showing a profit, and 4,000 a loss. Now it becomes clear that the second half of the shipment has caused loss. If the manager had limited himself to harvesting and shipping the first-named 4,000 kilograms, which hold an average of 3¼ per cent. of sulphate, and thus, at the supposed price, have a value of f.0.48¾ per kilogram, he would have made, instead of f.300—as now in this case, a profit on the direct cost of harvesting, &c., of 4,000 (f48¾.30) equal f.750; or more than double as much as is now obtained by the sale of 8,000 kilograms. Further, one has in this case the benefit of employing less labour, which is not always to be got in abundance; and—last not least—one does not bring to the market 4,000 kilograms of bark, of an average alloy of 1¼ per cent., and thus help to decrease the prices still further. The price of cinchona is not regulated exclusively by supply and demand. Speculation often plays an important part. Oftentimes the price goes down on a telegraphic intelligence from Ceylon that a large quantity of bark had been shipped. The alloy was then still unknown; the quantity, the high figure alone, was sufficient to depress the market. It is thus certainly in the interest of all who are concerned in cinchona not to augment this figure by valueless barks. If people at Ceylon could have resolved two years ago to neglect all the barks, whose value did not compensate the costs of harvesting and sale, all the other barks might have obtained perhaps twice the price, and more. Probably we should not have over-production at present, and the cause of the enormous decrease of prices would not exist. Let the planters in Java take this well to heart.

John Reoch, a native of Dundee, carpenter on board the Wasp, writing to his father shortly before the gunboat sailed for Singapore, confirmed the statement of the commander that the vessel was undermanned, and said that the sailors were terribly hard worked in consequence of the shortness of hands. Reoch joined the Wasp last June, and has a wife and one child living in Harwich.

SIR R. LETHBRIDGE AND HIS CONSTITUENTS.—On Saturday, at the Lancaster Hall, Lancaster-road, Notting-hill, Sir Roper Lethbridge, C.I.E., M.P., addressed his constituents. The chair was occupied by Mr Morton Daniel, and there was a good attendance. Letters of apology for non attendance were received from Lord C. Hamilton, Major-General Goldsworthy, M.P., and Mr. Whitmore, M.P. Sir R. Lethbridge, in the course of his remarks, complained that his political opponents had found fault with him for absence during the latter part of the Session, ignoring the fact that it was caused by serious ill-health. As to what had been accomplished during the past Session, the Unionist party had carried through Parliament more measures that were of interest to the working classes of this country than were passed in two years of Mr. Gladstone's Administration. With regard to Ireland, the speaker said he had a special appeal to make to his friends present, and a special challenge to make to the other side. It had been stated in the columns of the Press by Mr. T. P. O'Connor that the speaker had in voting for the Criminal Law Amendment Act voted for a wicked policy of coercion, and that in his election address he had stated that he was opposed to coercion. Now, his reply to that was this. If they meant by coercion the ignoring of privileges, the arbitrary suppression of rights, the coercion of innocent and law-abiding citizens, then he had always opposed such policy and always would oppose it. But if they meant by coercion the enforcement of law, the insisting on the punishment of those cruel and wicked wretches who murdered the poor peasantry of Ireland, who maimed cattle, and who boycotted the widow and fatherless, and carried out this horrible system with relentless cruelty, then he would assert, as long as he had breath in his body, that he would support such a policy.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE LESTERS.*

That drunkenness is one of the curses of England is perhaps scarcely open to question; it is the experience of everyday life in every spot of this island; towns and villages are alike smitten with the blight of intoxication. No one, therefore, can object to all honest efforts to improve matters in a direction which means ruin alike to body and soul. The temperance societies are doing splendid work, and none can deny them their meed of praise and encouragement. Every honest worker in the fold is welcome, and we gladly find so enthusiastic a reformer as Miss Skene counted in the army of humanitarians whose aim is the benefit of mankind, and the reward the happiness of countless beings, some of whom are as yet to be born.

But is the lady in question quite discreet as to her ways of achieving the results which she is so anxious to secure? To write a temperance novel is in itself a fitting means of impressing upon the public the truth which underlies all attempts to reform the drunkard and lead him to see the error of his ways. Medicine is at times desirable, but if there be an overdose not improbably the patient dies; and has not Miss Skene drawn somewhat largely upon imagination in the tale of the Lesters. Founded on fact it may be, but the colouring surely cannot but be unduly heightened by a fervid desire to portray the horrors of drink in terms which create a shudder of horror. That an educated couple in high life should give way to drink is, alas! no unreal picture of human nature; but this is but a drop in the ocean of Miss Skene's immensity. A child falls from its mother's arms on the floor, and becomes an idiot for life. Another suckling imbibes at the breast the poison of spirits, and lingers a sufferer for the rest of its days. A daughter stricken down in the bloom of life dies through the neglect of her mother, who got drunk in the night when she should have watched her charge. The young man to whom another of the girls is engaged takes to the fatal bottle, but, fortunately, only to be snatched as a brand from the fire through the instrumentality of the woman he eventually marries. The wife tumbles into the fire—the husband dies a drivelling idiot. The servant-girl loses name, health, character, body and soul; an engine-driver smashes his train and his passengers. All, all is drink.

Of course there is nothing improbable as regards each and every one of these circumstances; but is it to be believed that so many disasters crowd into the history of one single family, however sinning, however frail? This exaggeration is to be regretted. The dangers and pitfalls of the most seductive of all vices need no artificial elements to enhance their horrors, or increase their miseries. Their tale is written in deep lines on the faces—ah, alas! on the souls—of endless thousands, wrecked, ruined, outcast, and despised. Miss Skene so obviously means well, she is so ardent in her enthusiasm, so eager in her desire to save from destruction the weaker members of poor fallen humanity, that we are pained to write a deprecatory word, or pass a harsh judgment. We must, however, add that we do not doubt her zeal; we question her discretion.

THE GNOSTICS.†

"The general name 'Gnostics' is used to designate several widely differing sects which sprang up in the Eastern provinces of the Roman Empire, almost simultaneously with the first planting of Christianity." Such, in Mr. King's own words, is the subject upon which he has undertaken to enlighten mankind. And surely there is ample material wherewith to build the edifice of explanation. A reference to the table of contents will show that the work is divided into five parts, of which the first treats of Gnosticism and its sources, touching upon the Kabbala, the Talmud, the Zandavesta, Buddhism, Simonianism, Basilides, the Oppites, and suchlike. Part II. deals with the two great branches of inquiry comprised in the worship of Mithras and Serapis. Part III. touches upon the Abraxas, Abraxaster, and Abraxoid gems, with all their quaint devices, their subtle mysteries, and legends detailing their materials, their workmanship, and their nature. Part IV. is devoted to the figured monuments of Gnosticism, and explains the Gnostic Theogony, the talismans so dear to the imaginative minds of early Christendom, the magic squares and curious numerical devices so puzzling to the uninitiated, so simple to those who understand their mysticism. Part V. reveals the history of the Templars, the Rosicrucians, and the Freemasons, and is replete with erudite lore regarding these various societies, so similar and yet so dissimilar; so familiar, and yet so little known.

This catalogue raisonnée will give a fair idea of the wide scope of Mr. King's volume. As a masterpiece of patient investigation it must ever stand forth unapproached—it might almost be said unapproachable. That it is appreciated by the public is indicated by the appearance of a second edition. Nor is this in any way surprising, for who amongst us does not at times meet with quaint seals and mystic charms? And surely it is well to have some general ideas on the subject of "Gnosticism," which serves to interpret their hidden meaning and render intelligible what is else a string of silly, unmeaning letters and undecipherable hierologyphics.

LIFE OF LEO XIII.*

To write a biography is at best an arduous task. Without hero-worship it is hopeless to achieve success; and yet that failing, indifference brings in its train a long series of ills. The difficulties, too, of the position are materially increased when the subject of the memoir is still alive, in which case praise is apt to be fulsome and flattery insincere. But all these pitfalls are multiplied a hundredfold when an author undertakes the task of giving to the world a life of the occupant of St. Peter's Chair at Rome. A pope is—must be—to his followers little, if any, less than a deity. He is, it is true, a man, but on his election to the headship of the Catholic Church his apotheosis removes him from the mundane sphere in all respects, save as regards the poor mortal frame, which, externally human, is inwardly endowed with the beatitudes of immortality and infallibility. What can a writer do in such circumstances? He must fall low at the footstool of him who he is taught to believe holds the keys of life and death to all the world. If this be not the spirit in which the task is approached, a life of his Holiness cannot be worthy of a niche in the temple of Fame. Assuredly, however, Dr. O'Reilly does not err from this point of view. From the first to the last of the well-nigh 600 pages of the biography, there is not wanting laudation upon laudation—praise of the Pope, praise of the religion of which he is the head, praise of the man, praise of his actions, praise of his attainments, praise of his piety, praise of his statesmanship, praise of his benevolence. Ah ma foi c'est toujours perdrix!

We have no fault to find with Dr. O'Reilly in this respect; the failing is natural and unavoidable. But what verdict will calm criticism pass upon a man of admittedly wide attainments, cultivated, polished, and polite, who having the power, so far as Erin's Island is concerned, to put an end to the union of Catholicism and murder, of the deepest piety and the lowest revenge, yet confines himself to fulminating anathemas against secret societies, and all the while allows them to be used to further the selfish ends of his religion. It is all very well to proclaim the virtues of the Pope as he sits in the Vatican blessing and cursing, encouraging and dissuading, pitying and reviling alike kings and subjects, the rich and the poor, the lofty and the humble; but to many a practical mind his Holiness would be better advised were he to exert his all-powerful influence to restore to Ireland the peace, the security, and the prosperity which his priests are straining every nerve to make things of the past. "This ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone."

Equally unavailable are Dr. O'Reilly's earnest entreaties on be half of the Jesuits. Again, it is all very well to let loose the tongue of reproach and picture this fraternity as humble, innocent, harmless lambs in the midst of wolves, ever ready to snap them to pieces. This is not, however, the verdict of history, which proclaims rather that they are a clever, unscrupulous, designing set of intriguers, who do not hesitate to set the hand of the father against the son, and the hand of the mother-in-law against her daughter-in-law. What a different tale is proclaimed in Dr. Scott's translation of Griesingen's history of the Jesuits!

The Pope's history is contained in a nutshell. A splendid scholar, a most polished diplomatist, his birth and attainments early in life singled him out for high place and lofty station. For a vast number of years he was Bishop of Perugia, and since 1878 he has had charge of the keys of St. Peter. Voilà tout! The rest of the volume is "puffery," cleverly written, but somewhat sickening as regards the constant reiteration as to his Holiness's merits, his austerities, his rigid observance of the rules of his religious persuasion, and his firm belief that one thing, and one alone, can save the world from moral ruin and mundane destruction—an universal acceptance of the dictawhich seventy years of experience has taught the translated Cardinal Pecci to frame in elegant language and classical phraseology. From a Catholic point of view Dr. O'Reilly's memoir leaves nothing to be desired. Regarded from a Protestant standpoint the work is, to a large extent, "flat, stale, and unprofitable."

CHOLERA AND WATER IN INDIA.†

Dr. Farnell publishes a concisely written and closely argued pamphlet to prove that impure and contaminated water is the source of cholera, not only in India, but generally throughout the world. The idea seems plausible, and as the theory is supported by statistics and circumstantial evidence of various descriptions, it merits careful consideration at the hands of those in high places who are respousible for the materiel welfare of their fellow-creatures.

UNDER the title of "Old Lights and New," Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. have issued a pamphlet by Mr. James Durie, a journalist who has done good service with his pen in India and in England, and who in the brochure before us, discourses pleasantly on the various methods which have been tried to combat darkness from the time when Gideon placed oil lamps in the pitchers of Israel to the latest discovery of the present hour. For upwards of thirty centuries, mankind has been searching in vain for an ideal light, the characteristics of which Mr. Durie thus describes:—"An ideal light should be clear, that objects may be vividly and naturally depicted; pure, that it may not vitiate the atmosphere; cool, that it may not diffuse unhealty warmth; steady, that it may not injure the eyesight; silent, that it may not interfere with reflection; harmless, that it may not damage persons or property; trustworthy, that it may dispense with the trouble and expense of duplication; simple, that it may be controlled by unskilled hands without detracting from its efficiency; and, finally, it should be cheap, in order that it may be available to the masses, who are least able to counteract the noxious influences of unwholesome, or bear the cost of expensive, illumination."

Such a light, we are informed, has been found in the invention of Mr. J. H. Ross, of Dublin, who, realising the defects and advantages of gas lighting, has had for his object the application of paraffin in such a manner that it secures whatever benefits may be accorded to gas in the way of convenience without sacrificing the superiority with respect to purity, cheapness, and brilliancy of paraffin. The important part of Mr. Ross's invention consists in supplying a forced air draught to the flame; perfect combustion is thus secured, and the result is a steady, brilliant, and most pleasant light—no accumulation of oil vapour—no malodorous smell. When it is mentioned, in addition to all this, that there can be no breaking of lamp chimnies—for this light does not require any—its value will be enhanced in every housekeeper's eye. The light can be seen at 20, Bucklersbury, and a visit will well repay any caller's trouble. For India the invention is most applicable and most valuable, and it ought to be adopted in the barracks and hospitals of every station and cantonment. Those who have any experience of the dull and dingy appearance of an Indian barrack-room at night, when the greasy, flickering oil lamps only seem to make the darkness visible and the soldier swear, will endorse the opinion that the Ross light will be a "boon and a blessing" to Tommy Atkins, which he will quickly appreciate. We wonder that Mr. Durie has not touched upon this in his pamphlet, which is otherwise replete with useful and interesting information, and which concludes with the excellent counsel, "When you can get a wholesome light, do not injure your homes and health with dangerous and impure combustibles. When you can get a cheap light do not pay for a dear one."

Lieut.-Colonel G. B. Meares will, it is understood, obtain the command of the 2nd Battalion Royal Fusiliers on the retirement of Colonel F. C. Keyser, C.B. Lieut.-Colonel Meares served with the 7th Fusiliers in the Indian N.W. Frontier War of 1863 with the Eusofyze Field Force, and was present at the defence of the Sungahs at the Umbeyla Pass, and at the attack on and storming of the Conical Hill and destruction of Lalloo on Dec. 15. He was also in the action at Umbeyla and destruction of the village at the foot of the Bonair Pass on Dec. 16 (medal with clasp). Captain J. A. Skene Thompson, 2nd Battalion Duke of Wellington's West Riding Regiment, has been selected for the adjutancy of the 1st London Rifle Volunteers, which became vacant on the 2nd ult., on the completion of the term of service of Major C. Wortham, King's Royal Rifle Corps. Captain Thompson served with the 3rd Goorkhas in the Afghan War in 1880, and was present in the engagements at Ahmed Kheyl and Urzoo near Ghuznee, and in the subsequent operations in the Logar Valley, receiving the medal with clasp.

M. MANES, the Governor of the French possessions in India, is said to entertain a strong dislike to the English and English institutions, and he has lately taken an opportunity of displaying this feeling by an attempt to suppress English education at Pondicherry. There was, it appears, established a year or two ago in that town an English Middle School, as a branch of the Primary School which is said to have given general satisfaction; but only a few weeks ago the Governor issued an order for the abolition of the English school, and refused to listen to any requests for its continuance. He further displayed his hostility to the English only a few days ago when he struck off the names of two English boys from the number of those who had obtained free scholarships at the last examination, his only reason being that the boys were English, and therefore could not be allowed to enjoy free scholarships at the expense of the French people.

COMMERCIAL.

INDIAN TEA COMPANIES.—A table, setting forth the working of the Indian Tea Companies registered in London, has been compiled by Mr. Henry Earnshaw, of St. Mary-axe. Altogether nineteen companies are embraced in this table, and there are only two of these which do not pay a dividend. Strictly speaking, indeed, there is but one non-dividend paying company, for the estates of the Land Mortgage Bank of India yielded a profit on their cultivation, although the general position of the concern is not such as to permit it to give its shareholders the benefit of such profit. One company, the Jorehaut, paid a dividend of 18 per cent.; one, the Brahmaputra, 15 per cent.; one, the Borokai, 13 per cent.; six 10 per cent.; one 8 per cent.; one 7½ per cent.; one 6½ per cent.; three 5 per cent.; and there were one or two others which made smaller distributions. The industry is, therefore, a prosperous one. Not a single company in the list failed to realise a profit on the tea produced, over and above the cost of production. That profit ranged from 1.38d. to 7.21d. per lb. The lowest price obtained by any company for its crop was 9.53d. per lb., and the company which got that price paid a dividend of § per cent. to its shareholders. One company, the Jhanzi Tea Association, realised 1s. 7-18d. gross, but its net return on the capital employed was not the highest, because its crop was relatively small. A curious divergence is exhibited in the amount of capital per acre of cultivation sunk in the industry by the various companies. One company has as little as £22 12s. per acre so invested, and another as much as £125. The former pays 18 per cent. dividend, and the latter § per cent. A company, however, the Scottish Assam, whose capital is £104 per acre in cultivation, pays 5 per cent. to its shareholders. The total capital invested by the nineteen companies amounts to £1,900,000, but that includes the £337,000 set down against the Land Mortgage Bank of India. Excluding it there are only half-a-dozen companies whose capital amounts to £100,000 and upwards.

Messrs. H. A. Hertz and Co.'s Fortnightly Ceylon and Java Tea Report says:—Of Ceylon Tea sales have been rather larger than in the previous fortnight, 7,166 packages having been disposed of. The quality with few exceptions has been good. Broken Pekoes and Orange Pekoes, fine and finest, have been scarce and bring full prices. Broken Pekoes, Medium and Good Medium, show well-maintained rates; thick liquoring parcels occasionally firmer. For Pekoe, Pekoe Souchong and Souchong, demand has continued active, and quotations are fully those of a fortnight back. The inquiry is strongest for lowest kinds at from 11½d. to 1s. 0½d. per lb. Java Tea: No public sales have been held. Privately, Souchongs with quality are in demand, and some sales have been made for home trade. Broken Pekoes are wanted under 1s. per lb.

THE PUNJAB FRONTIER FORCE.—The announcement made some time ago that the Government of India had sanctioned the transfer of young officers from the Bombay and Madras Staff Corps to the regiments of the Punjab Frontier Force in order that the subalterns of the two lesser Presidencies might have an equal chance of service on the frontier as their comrades in Bengal, was one that caused a good deal of expectation among the junior ranks. Time passed, however, and no nominations were made to the frontier regiments. What was the reason? It could not be that the youngsters in the Bombay and Madras Staff Corps were holding back, because, as everybody knows, to a lad of spirit the Punjab Frontier Force holds out the finest prospect of soldiering in India. The reason was quite otherwise. It turned out on inquiry that there were no subalterns to spare from either Bombay or Madras. Or, to be more accurate, the Bombay Army has found itself able to spare one subaltern, while the Madras Army has apparently contented itself with promising some by-and-by. Everybody, one would think, is perfectly well aware of the fact that there are no superfluous subalterns anywhere. The present unhappy system of officering the Indian Army from the English Army cripples British regiments without filling up vacancies in Native battalions. There are any number of fine young fellows, sons of officers, who would be only too glad to embrace the Indian Army as a career, and there is a great want of officers for the Indian Army. The problem is to secure these young fellows for the Service, and this can very easily be done by giving a certain number of direct commissions every year. This would relieve British regiments of the present heavy drain upon them, and it would give employment to the sons of a number of old and deserving officers.

A RESOLUTION states that any Civil Engineer of the Public Works Department who, on reaching the age of 50 years, has not attained the rank of Superintending Engineer, shall be liable to be called on to retire, provided that no officer having less than 25 years' service to credit for pension be compelled to retire within two years of the present date; no officer with less than 20 years' service within three years; and that any officer called on to retire be allowed to take any furlough admissible before his retirement, subject to the conditions under section 110, rule 9, of the Civil Pension Code. This last proviso to be in force for five years. Any military officer in the Public Works Department who, on reaching 50 years, has not obtained the rank of Superintending Engineer, shall be liable to be called on to vacate his appointment provided he be first allowed to take any furlough admissible. This last proviso to be in force for five years.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1887.

MORE ABOUT THE NIZAM'S OFFER.

IT is surely very unfortunate that there should be squabblings and discussions in the Press in England and in India regarding this matter of the Nizam's offer of money to the Government of India. It is to be regretted that when the offer was made there should have been any hesitation as to accepting it or politely refusing it. That hesitation has been the cause of all the misunderstanding which has since arisen. If the Viceroy had had the power to come to an immediate decision on the subject no one could have couched acceptance or refusal in more graceful terms than Lord Dufferin. But that power was evidently not accorded to him, and hence the very diplomatic letter which his Excellency sent to the ruler of Hyderabad by the hands of Colonel Marshall, the bearer of the Nizam's munificent offer. Read in any light that the reader fancies, one thing is apparent in that letter, and that is that the mind of the Paramount Power was somewhat perplexed. A large mind may be allowed, as the song says, a long time in making itself up, but the song referred to an offer of marriage, not to an offer of a present of £600,000. The hesitation in the present instance has placed all concerned in an unpleasant and awkward position. The offer was no sooner made public, with the announcement that a decision had not been come to regarding its acceptance, than good-natured pens went to work to show that the Nizam had some ulterior object in view, and that object was, it was very bluntly said, nothing less than the restoration of the Berars. And now the St. James's Gazette adds another tale to help in coming to a settlement of this delicate matter. In an article on Saturday last, on the Nizam's offer, it gives the following story as coming from Hyderabad :—"When Col. Marshall, who is in the service of the Government of India, and who was recently appointed by that Government the Nizam's confidential adviser, took Lord Dufferin the Nizams's letter offering a contribution of 20 lakhs of rupees annually for three years, he also took with him a cheque for 20 lakhs to meet the first year's contribution, which 20 lakhs had been advanced by one of the Nizam's officials!" Without accepting this story as true, the writer of the article hangs a moral on to it nevertheless. The moral is to the effect that the offer had better not be accepted. It is pointed out that "desirous as the Nizam has shown himself to throw in his lot with us his treasury is not so flourishing as to be able to meet the drain upon it of 20 lakhs annually for three years without an immediate and thorough reduction of State expenditure—in all countries a difficult task, but especially so where crowds of officials of needy noblemen and their retainers look to the State for maintenance." This, of course, infers plainly that the Nizam has made an offer which he is not in a position to make, and that he is generous before he is just; for, as a ruler, he should not drain his State even for the laudable purpose of showing his loyalty to the British Government. But the writer goes further, and adds that Lord Dufferin should bear in mind "what seems to have been overlooked elsewhere, that it behoves the Government of India to proceed cautiously, inasmuch as it lately appointed one of its own officials the Nizam's confidential adviser." This would indicate that there may be a lurking suspicion in some minds that the confidential adviser, Colonel Marshall, brought some kind of influence or pressure upon the Nizam to induce him to make the offer he did. If this were so, we certainly should endorse the conclusion which the St. James's Gazette comes to that "our acceptance of the Nizam's offer becomes, under the circumstances, a very delicate matter indeed." Very, indeed; "under the circumstances." But what are these circumstances? Is there the slightest foundation for even a suspicion that they are? Here is what the Nizam says:—

His Highness the Nizam wishes publicly and emphatically to deny that he had any ulterior motive in offering to assist in strengthening the Frontier. He was actuated simply by a loyal devotion to the British Government and an earnest desire for the unity of the Indian Empire. The thought of the restitution of the Berars never entered his Highness's mind, nor did he look for any reward for doing what he considers a sacred duty. If ever his Highness should deem it advisable to ask for the Berars to be restored to him he will do so in an open and straightforward manner, and not under the cloak of offers of help.

This should be taken as conclusive evidence of the Nizam's good intentions, and all cavilling should cease. For, as the Bombay Gazette to hand to-day says, "Commentators at home and abroad are entitled if they choose to read between the lines of this as of every other State paper; but they are not entitled to read into another man's language, even when he happens to be a prince, notions of their own which have not even a subjective relation to the terms employed." We are not surprised, however, to learn also that the Nizam has been much pained by the insinuations and impertinences which have been so rife regarding his intentions. Not only must the effect be bad upon his mind, but it must have an evil effect upon the minds of the other princes of India, who will fail to understand the hesitating action of the Paramount Power, and will misinterpret it as showing a want of faith in the professions of loyalty of all its Indian feudatories.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE 12th Royal Lancers, under the command of Colonel the Hon. W. J. Stewart, left Bangalore on October 21 for Bombay, en route to England in two batches. General Rowlands, commanding the division, in his farewell order says that he could not allow this fine regiment to quit his division without complimenting Colonel Stewart and his officers on the smartness, soldierlike bearing, and high state of efficiency of all ranks.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF arrived at Debra on the 20th Oct., and inspected the lines of the new Goorkha battalion. On account of the abandonment of the Viceroy's visit to Quetta Sir Frederick Roberts will pay a visit to Murree and Rawalpindi, where he will see the Home for Nursing Sisters, and then go on to Quetta, reaching Kurrachee on the 12th November.

A GENERAL ORDER by the Commander-in-Chief confers the Silver Medal for Meritorous Service upon Regimental Sergeant-Major Rees Isaacs, late 21st Hussars; Quartermaster Sergeant Foster-Parsons, late 1st Battalion 4th Foot; Quartermaster-Sergeant Thomas Tully, late 2nd Battalion 4th Foot; Sergeant-Major James Kelly, late 41st Foot; and Quartermaster-Sergeant James Holt, late 51st Foot.

CAPTAIN H. C. HOGG having completed twenty years' services, has been promoted to Major.

LIEUTENANT J. J. O'BRIEN SEXTON, 2nd Battalion Royal Dublin Fusiliers, has been appointed a probationer for the Bombay Staff Corps.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL W. P. SYMONS, at present commanding the Mounted Infantry in Burma, has been appointed to command the Chindwin District.

THE Government of India has granted Major Watling an extension of six months' tenure in the appointment of Deputy Quartermaster-General. This officer will not revert to regimental duty until May 1. 1888.

THE Marine Battalion will move to Poona in January next, to take part in the Camp of Exercise. If such be the case, it will be the first time the headquarters of the battalion has moved out of Bombay since its formation in 1777.

ARTILLERY practices on a large scale is to be carried out at Kirkee in January next, when five horsed batteries will be concentrated. Then there are to be also siege operations with the garrison artillery and Sappers and Miners.

GOVERNMENT has ordered that the rules issued in Bengal, relative to the number of officers of Native Infantry regiments who should appear mounted on parade, are to be adopted in the Bombay Army.

SURGEON C. J. ADDISON, Army Medical Staff, is to be transferred at once from Quetta to Umballa. Dr. Addison's name will be remembered in connection with the Ambulance Association which he established at Quetta.

THE military post at Myotha has been handed over to the Burmah Police, and the troops withdrawn thence to Choungwa, with the exception of the cavalry detachment, which will remain until further orders.

OFFICERS of the Royal Artillery and British and Native Infantry appointed to Native Cavalry are to be reported on after six months as to their fitness for service with cavalry; if the report is favourable they will then be attached to a British cavalry regiment for a period of four months, and will proceed, at their own expense, to the nearest station where one is quartered.

IT has been decided, as a special measure, to meet the demand for probationers for the Indian Staff Corps at the present time, to allow officers serving elsewhere than in India who are under twenty-five years of age and otherwise qualified, without restrictions as to service or regimental duty, to be recommended for appointment, paragraph 2 of certificate B of India Army Circulars 165 of 1884 being omitted, if the necessary attainments cannot be certified to.

THE results of the shooting of the entire Indian Army during the last musketry season have been published in general orders. Taken altogether they are held by the Commander-in-Chief to represent a decided improvement—"the standard of merit attained is in every respect more satisfactory than that of 1885-86." Looking first to the British Infantry, the best shooting regiment in India is the 2nd Middlesex (Kamptee), which stands alone at a figure of over 200, and alone reaches the standard "very good." The 2nd Royal Fusiliers and 2nd Warwickshire, Wellington and Jubbulpore, respectively, are not very far behind. Of British Cavalry the 12th Lancers, now on the point of departure from the country, is the only corps that has at all distinguished itself. In the Native Infantry, the 29th Punjab just gains the first place, being very closely pressed by the 6th Punjab and the Merwara Battalion, while the 19th Punjab and the 45th and 4th Sikhs are close up. Should there be anyone left in this part of India who cherishes the obsolete vanities of Presidency rivalry, he will not fail to dwell upon the fact that the first twenty places are all filled by Bengal regiments. Others will be more concerned with seeing that a fair sprinkling both of Madras and Bombay regiments have done well enough to come under the heading "good." The success of the Central India Corps under the Government of India is remarkable. Of this small force three regiments stand in the first 20, and two in the first 10, testifying to the good result of the enthusiasm of their officers for getting up meetings and matches. As a whole, however, no branch has done anything like so well as the Native Cavalry. Out of 38 regiments no less than 19 are "very good" and 14 more "good," leaving but five to fall under the inferior designations. The 3rd Madras Light Cavalry has the honour of heading this remarkable list, which will give soldiers a higher opinion than ever of this branch of the Indian Forces.

ARRIVAL OF THE TROOPSHIP MALABAR.

Her Majesty's troopship Malabar, Captain Fanshawe, arrived in harbour on the 20th instant from Portsmouth, which she left on Sept. 21, calling at Queenstown on the 23rd, Port Said on Oct. 5, and Suez on the 7th. She brought 50 officers, 13 ladies, 10 children, 1,071 men, 48 women, and 60 children, belonging to 4th S. Irish Div. R.A., 2nd Welsh Div. R.A., 7th Scottish R.A., 8th Scottish Div. R.A., and 4th Eastern Div. R.A. During the voyage two children and a ship's steward died. The Malabar experienced fine weather throughout. The following are the names of officers and their families:—

THE RAILWAY CONNECTION OF BURMAH AND CHINA.

Mr. Archibald R. Colquhoun, deputy commissioner for Burmah, delivered an address on the 7th inst., before a special meeting of the London Chamber of Commerce, held at their offices, Botolph-house, East-cheap. Mr. Hugh M. Matheson (chairman of the East India and China Trade section) presided, and there was a large attendance of members of the Chamber and other gentlemen interested in the trade of the East, among them being Mr. J. Herbert Tritton (president of the Chamber), Sir Francis Plunkett (British Minister to Japan), Sir E. B. Sladen (Ex-Commissioner in Burmah), Sir Halliday Macartney, Sir Juland Danvers, Lieut.-General Sir John Hunter, Lieut.-General Sir Andrew Clarke, Captain J. R. Vyvyan (Trinity-house), Mr. Holt S. Hallett, Mr. J. Howard Gwyther, Mr. MacAndrew, Mr. Manson, Mr. G. A. Butler, Mr. A. G. Angier, Mr. W. G. Howell, Mr. W. Adamson, Mr. William Keswick, Mr. A. Cheyne, and Mr. W. Westgarth. Letters were read from Sir George Balfour, M.P., and Sir Bernhard Samuelson, M.P., both of whom wrote recognising the importance of the subject and their sympathies with Mr. Colquhoun.

The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, stated that the London Chamber of Commerce, like the other Chambers throughout the country, had long taken a warm interest in the question of the establishment of trade relations with South-Western China by way of Burmah. There were none to whom they were so much indebted as they were to Mr. Colquhoun and Mr. Hallett for the praiseworthy efforts they had made to throw light on this question, and he was sure that the thanks of the commercial community were due in an eminent degree to those gentlemen. (Cheers.) We all recognised the imperative necessity for Great Britain not only to conserve and to improve their commercial relations with foreign countries, but also to take advantage of every new opening, and to see to it that we obtained our full share of the trade of new districts. (Hear, hear.) Within a comparatively recent period British merchants had been called upon to face an amount of serious competition in the East, formerly unknown, and it could not be denied that the establishment of the French in Tong-King and the favourable conditions obtained by them from the Government of China for entrance into the south-western portion of that vast Empire were deserving of our careful attention. These facts ought at least to stimulate us to turn to account with as little delay as possible the important acquisition of Upper Burmah; and any definite scheme which would lead to the establishment of railway communication between Burmah and South-West China ought to receive the serious and early attention of British merchants and of the British Government. He trusted that their meeting that day would not be barren of results. (Cheers.)

Mr. Colquhoun, who was warmly received, stated that he had only time to bring to their notice the leading features relative to the subject of the connection of Burmah and China by railway, but the question would be found fully discussed in the report by Mr. Hallett and himself submitted that day to Her Majesty's Government and the British Chambers of Commerce. Various causes had of late conduced to compel the commercial community to consider carefully the position of Great Britain in the international commercial contest. Among them had been the depression of trade, the hostile tariffs enacted against our goods, and the activity of our continental neighbours and rivals in competing not only in manufactures, but in the carrying trad and distribution abroad. It had at last begun to sink into the mind of Englishmen that the industrial States of Europe had during the last twenty years relatively developed their foreign trade and mercantile marine more rapidly than ourselves. The only remedy for that state of affairs was to discover new customers who were to be found in new markets and developing those already existing. Those areas for the extension of our commerce were to be found in the colonies and in the unopened markets of Asia and Africa. The value of British colonies and possessions was not even yet recognised by the mercantile and manufacturing classes of the country, and still less by the working man. They were by far our best customers. The great new field for our commerce to which he that day desired to draw their attention lay in Eastern Asia, where the markets were ready for immediate development, offering present relief, while Africa, New Guinea, and such great markets required "education." Valuable as these in time would be, they were altogether dwarfed by the large and lucrative outlet for our trade in Eastern Asia, the most promising to be seen in any part of the world. This latter included China, Korea, Formosa, Indo-China (including Siam and the Siamese Shan States, Malaya, Upper Burmah, and the Burmese Shan States), and Thibet. In Eastern Asia the markets of the first order were China and Indo-China. The others were of quite secondary importance at present. It had increasingly been the object of the British commercial communities for the past fifty years to open up the Shan States and South-West China to our commerce. As late back as 1829 Lord William Bentinck, and in 1836 Lord Auckland, interested themselves in the question of opening communication with the Shan States and South-Western China. In 1861 Sir Arthur Phayre, the first Chief Commissioner of Burmah, recommended the sanction of a survey to Kiang Hung, and in 1866 Lord Salisbury, then Viscount Cranborne, acknowledging the great importance of the question, sanctioned a railway survey to China of what was practically the route which Mr. Hallett and himself were now advocating. In 1869 the Duke of Argyll sanctioned a survey between Tonghoo and Kiang Hung, if it could be carried out without political complications or undue expenditure. In 1874 Lord Salisbury once more sanctioned a survey to Kiang Hung or some point near it, to use his own words, "both in the interests of England and British Burmah." It was of importance to know that both political parties in this country, the Liberals and the Conservatives, had sanctioned this scheme. No survey, however, was executed beyond our boundary, and nothing practically was done until the exploration and exploration-survey on which he and Mr. Hallett had been engaged in the last four or five years, supported by the Chambers of Commerce of London, Manchester, Glasgow, Rangoon, Singapore, and by the Government of the Straits Settlements. The barrier which had blocked up our approach from the Indian littoral had been broken down, and the North-Eastern Indian frontier was of vastly greater commercial importance to us than our North Western, because on the former frontier we moved towards a friendly and peaceful Power, offering us new markets, with well-founded hopes of vast future expansion. Referring to the best line for connecting India and Burmah he said that if there were no hills or large rivers in the country the connection of India and China would naturally be in a direct line from Chittagong, at the head of the Bay of Bengal, to Mandalay, and thence in an equally direct line to Yunnan Fu, the capital of Yunnan. But the maze of steep and precipitous hills which filled up the country as far as the Irrawaddy made such a line prohibitive. A far cheaper and more remunerative connection of the Indian and Burmese lines would be made by carrying a line from Chittagong to Makum, thence across the Patkoi range, and through the Hookong Valley, to join the railway lately proposed by Mr. Crosthwaite, Chief Commissioner of Burmah, from near Sagain up the Moo Valley to Mogoung, with a branch to Bhamo. So the shortest route between Burmah itself and China would be actually the longest and most expensive in execution. A railway from Bhamo to Yunnan Fu would be longer than one from our seaport of Moulmain to the same place He pointed out how they had been driven to the conclusion that the connection should be made across the hills in the neighbourhood of our seaport of Moulmain. After explaining the advantage of the Moulmain-Ssumao route over any other that could be proposed from Burmah, and showing that there were no physical impediments along the line sufficient to prevent the proposed connection of Burmah and South-Western China by a railway "cheap in construction and certain to prove highly remunerative," he referred to the rival routes outside Burmah, which sought to gain the same end—South-Western China, with Yunnan Fu as a central point. Taking Yunnan Fu as the objective, he mentioned the routes by which it was approached from the various ports on the seaboard—the Yangtsze route, the Canton River route, the Tong-King or Red River route, and the Bangkok or Siam route—noting the time of transit by each, and subsequently observed that Yunnan Fu was further off in time-distance from Shanghai than from Bangkok, and that at present, for purposes of import trade, it was nearer Canton than any other port on the China Sea, and naturally got its European goods, although at great expense, from that place. Referring to the French projects to secure the trade of South and South-Western China, Mr. Colquhoun expressed his belief that a route could be found to reach the objective, Yunnan Fu, from Tong-King, and the French evidently thought so too. There seemed to be a disposition on the part of our merchants to treat the French projects as more or less in the air; but if, relying on that, any intended action on our part was put off he thought we should be disagreeably deceived before very long. The French Government, indeed, were now approaching not only French financiers but financiers in this city in connection with their projects. We were now practically engaged with the French on a railway race for the trade of South-Western China. A common objective—Ssumao—was now the aim in view, and whoever gained the goal first would enjoy a great advantage. The line from Moulmain enjoyed four great dvantages over the Tong-King routes, of being nearer to the mother ountry than Tong-King by 2,100 miles, being nearer India by 2,800 miles, avoiding the dangerous navigation of the China seas, and passing hrough generally rich, peaceable, and populated districts. The present cost of carriage in Indo-China and South-Western China was enormous, and by the low charge which would be levied by a railway from Moulmain, every branch of our home industries would receive employment through the line. The construction of the proposed railway to the Chinese frontier would lead to the eventual, and probably early, introduction of railways into Western China. The projected line would be of metre gauge to meet the Burmese system. The British part would consist of two sections—(1) Moulmain to the Siamese frontier at Myawaddi, and (2) Kiang Hsen to the Chinese frontier near Ssumao. The cost of the British part would be £2,531,250, the gross guarantee on which, at 4 per cent., would be £101,250. The Siamese part of the railway consisted of two necessary sections—(1) from the British frontier to Raheng, and (2) from Raheng to Kiang Hsen. The cost would be £2,197,500, the gross guarantee on which, at 4 per cent., would be £87,900. The section from Raheng to Bangkok was not part of the project before them that day, but it would open up a most important part of Siam. This section of 268 miles would cost £1,140,000, the gross guarantee on which, at 4 per cent., would amount to £45,600. The British and Siamese sections could be constructed in four years, possibly three years, and the Raheng-Bangkok section in two years. There were two methods of construction available—by the State or by a private company under a guarantee. In his opinion the British Government should guarantee the whole through line, making the ecessary arrangements with the Siamese Government for refund upon the portions within Siamese territory. They believed the project was of vast national importance, touching closely Imperial as well as Indian interests. He concluded, "A path has been chosen—the safest, the cheapest, the most promising—by which the railway connection of Burmah and South-Western China, and thus the junction of the two most populous empires of the world, can be effected. The laying down of less than 700 miles of railway for such a purpose is surely a task not beyond our powers."

Mr. W. Adamson proposed the following resolution:—"This meeting of members of the London Chamber of Commerce and others specially interested in Eastern trade, having heard Mr. Colquhoun's final report on the prospects of railway communication between Burmah and South-West China, and considering that the economic value of Burmah would be greatly enhanced if approved lines of railway could be established, resolves, that Her Majesty's Government be approached with a view to their urging upon the Government of India the great desirability of conceding a guarantee to any responsible private enterprise which may be prepared to undertake the construction of the approved lines; and further, that this meeting desires to express its sense of the high value of the reports of Mr. A. R. Colquhoun and Mr. Holt Hallett, which have placed the project in such a practical shape before the commercial community." The Chamber, he said, could not commit itself definitely, but desired to show its sympathy with the project. The French were shutting us out by hostile tariffs from the trade of Saigon and Tong-King, but in the end this might not be a loss to us, as it might have the effect of retarding their railway schemes. He did not think that the Raheng-Bangkok line would prove very remunerative, as all this country was rice lands, and the export took place from Bangkok to our colonies of Singapore and Hong Kong. It would be little advantage to deliver this rice on the other side of the peninsula at Moulmain. He was glad to learn that the engineering difficulties of the project were not great.

Mr. Tritton, in seconding the motion, said he regarded the construction of a system of roadways, and especially of a railway such as that proposed by Mr. Colquhoun and Mr. Hallett, as the necessary corollary of British action in Burmah. So far as anything could be proved Mr. Colquhoun had proved that this sum of £5,000,000 expended in railway construction in Burmah and Siam would not only benefit the country, but would bring an adequate return to those who invested in it, besides being of very great importance to the mercantile community of this country.

Mr. J. M. Maclean, M.P., said the project was one of extreme importance. We wanted some return for our annexation of Burmah. If France with her protective duties constructed a railway from Tong-King this country would be shut out from the valuable markets of South-West China. Nothing could be more certain than that Messrs. Colquhoun and Hallett had selected the shortest and safest and the easiest route to China, and having regard to the great benefits which the construction of the railway would confer upon Burmah and India he thought the Government of India might fairly be called upon to devote some portion of the military expenditure which would be saved shortly in Burmah to providing a guarantee for the line. India would supply a large portion of the cottons required in the new markets, and would thus be benefited for her expenditure.

Captain Colomb, M.P., said that the Eastern question, as far as India was concerned, was shifting day by day. The great commercial event which the world was looking for was the opening up of China, and the success of any Western nation in taking advantage of that event would be in proportion to the extent of its preparations for it. This projected railway, although in his opinion the more the relations between the vast Empire of China in the Far East and the great Empire of ourselves in the West were consolidated, the more we prepared for a peaceful solution of the Eastern question. It could be aggravated by the intervention of a third party, and if we allowed the French to beat us in the race referred to it would mean a wonderful development of French Tong-King, and the greater danger of interference with intervening lines of sea route. If we constructed it it would mean better commercial relations and a better understanding with China, and both the flag and the commerce would be upheld.

After a few words from Mr. Bryce, who was travelling in the country at the same time as Mr. Hallett, and in which he bore evidence to the assiduity of his work, the Chairman put the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

On the motion of Mr. Hyde Clarke a vote of thanks to the chairman was passed, and the meeting terminated.

MESSRS. ANGIER BROTHERS' STEAM FREIGHT REPORT says:—Freights during the last fortnight have made further improvement in almost every direction, excepting homeward from India and China, and even in the last-named trades there are signs that the worst has been seen, for tonnage is becoming less abundant in the Far East, whilst there are indications of a near increase in the demand. Japan, Manila, Tong-King and Java have taken up a number of steamers, and more will be required, whilst few are going out. India homeward rates are as low as ever known in the worst times. Black Sea, Azoff, and Danube business is not so extensive, but rates keep up and even advance. Mediterranean and Baltic freights are at a moderately paying level, well sustained. American business is not yet remunerative, but is improving. Outward freights are firm all round, but highest eastwards to India, China, and South America. Orders for steamers on time charter are fairly numerous at improved figures. On the whole the present position of shipping property is much improved, being on a sound and improving basis, but the long depression suffered has so accustomed owners to losses and anxious unremunerative work that the present improvement is being much exaggerated, and over sanguine views as to profits are being too much encouraged. It is the old type of steamer still which constitutes the steam fleet of this country and the world, and which must be able to pay a proper depreciation and profit before the trade can be considered satisfactory, and for this there must be a further advance of 50 per cent. in freights all round. The new steamers with their increased power of economy are doing fairly well, but their number is an insignificant part of the whole. In the building trade the number of new steamers contracted for is sufficient to keep a number of the East coast yards going during the winter and spring, but the Scotch yards are very bare of work; still the tonnage now booked is quite as much as is good for the trade. East India Freights have continued exceedingly dull. From Japan 32/6 is offering for Rice to Holland, November loading, and 35/ to Mediterranean, late December. From Java 33/9 has been paid for Sugar to Liverpool direct November, and this rate might be obtained for Mediterranean or Adriatic, November-December. A boat has been fixed from Saigon at 31/3 Rice to picked ports, U.K. or Cont., November, and another might be placed on same terms. From Singapore a lump sum equal to about 29/ d.w.c. has been accepted for two discharging ports, Mediterranean and U.K., by prompt boat. Business from the Burmah Rice Ports for next season remains very inactive, and rates are slightly weaker; a large boat has been placed at 32/6 to Liverpool direct; 33/9 to 35/ net, according to size, offering to U.K. or Cont., February-March loading.

COMPRISING PRACTICAL RULES FOR LEARNING THE LANGUAGE, VOCABULARY, DIALOGUE, LETTERS, AND IDIOMS, &c., IN ENGLISH AND ARABIC.

BY

Rev. ANTON TIEN, Ph.D., M.R.A.S.,

Hon. Curate of Holy Trinity, Milton-next-Gravesend; Medallist of the Roman University de Propaganda Fide; First Class Honour Man in Arabic, Syriac, and Hebrew; and Proxime Accessit in Classics. Formerly First Class Interpreter to the Allied Forces in the Crimea; K.C. of the Order of the Medjidie, &c., &c.; Author of the "Levant Interpreter" and the "Egyptian Handbook"; and Reviser of the Arabic Prayer Book, &c., &c.

"Dr. Tien's little book will be found a valuable guide to the traveller who wishes not so much to talk as to understand what he hears spoken and sees written in common Arabic. In the course of a hundred pages a clever summary is provided of Arabic grammar, which will be found sufficient for all ordinary purposes, and which may easily be made the subject of further instruction from the native teacher."—SATURDAY REVIEW.

"The most useful portion of the book consists of the dialogues, the idiomatic exercises, the vocabulary, and other additions of practical usefulness, such as lists of official titles, of tribal names, and information on the divisions of time, on weights and measures, currency, and commercial, legal, and political terms."—ATHENÆUM.

"The perusal of Dr. Tien's admirable work will be of the greatest value to officers and others under orders for the East."—MORNING POST.

"Will be found very useful by soldiers, officials, students, and merchants desirous of obtaining a certain degree of proficiency in the spoken language, which is becoming in these days of increasing importance."—DAILY NEWS.

"Dr. Tien's Manual can be confidently recommended as the most simple, practical, and trustworthy guide which has yet appeared."—OVERLAND MAIL.

"The rules and explanations are clear, terse, and to the point, and we cordially recommend his book to all who wish to acquire a conversational knowledge of Arabic." TRUBNER'S RECORD.

"The book is of a handy and convenient size, and both author and publishers have rendered important service in placing it within reach of students."—INDIAN DAILY NEWS.

"The author of the volume before us has done good service in compiling this Manual, in which the difficulties—and, it must be confessed, they are not a few—in mastering Arabic are reduced to a minimum."—BROAD ARROW.

THE

BROAD ARROW

AND

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

'Th Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" nas acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGIATE SCHOOL.

THE course of instruction is designed to PREPARE BOYS (Sons of Gentlemen, from 7 years of age) to occupy the positions of Land Owners and Occupiers, Land Agents, Surveyors, intending Colonists, &c. The education secured at this Institution is of a very superior character, the whole object of the School being to impart a thoroughly practical and scientific knowledge of all agricultural subjects; a thorough moral, intellectual, and physical training, it pledges itself to send forth its pupils practically religious and sound scholars. The school is most pleasantly situated in a healthy locality. The greatest possible care is bestowed upon the health and domestic comfort of the pupils. The diet is excellent and unlimited. The school is very strongly recommended. References throughout Great Britain.—Address for prospectus the PRINCIPAL, Maypole Road, East Grinstead, Sussex.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

HERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

SYSTEMS OF

HEATING, COOLING, VENTILATING, AND ELECTRIC LIGHTING ARE THE CHEAPEST AND BEST.

TESTIMONIALS.

From R. NORMAN SHAW, Architect to the Royal Academy :—

29, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C.,
February 19 1884.

The "Æolus" Waterspray Company have fixed two Air Extractors and one Air Warmer in the Life School of the Royal Academy of Arts with, we all think, the happiest results. Our troubles with that school have always been very great, as owing to the amount of gas consumed, and the necessity of keeping the school well heated on account of the Nude Models, its tendency has been to get unbearably hot, and when windows were attempted to be opened the draughts were most dangerous. It is now kept at a pleasant even temperature, and there are no draughts. The reason for this is not difficult to find. The very hot air from the steam-pipes, and the fumes from the gas, ar carried off as fast as they are generated, and a continual stream of warm fresh air being supplied, the school is kept comfortable.

(Signed) R. NORMAN SHAW, R.A., Architect.

Re St. Peter's Church, Jarrow-on-Tyne.

Dear Sir,—We have pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of your "Invisible Roof Ventilators," which we fixed in above church with admirable results.—We are, yours faithfully,

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Scene from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

The Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 4th November; from Allahabad and Madras to the 2nd November; and from Calcutta to the 1st November.

The Viceroy left Simla Nov. 3 on his cold weather tour.

Lady Dufferin, in a letter thanking the subscribers to the Jubilee collection for the National Association, notifies that the amount realised exceeds five lakhs. Her ladyship thanks the tens of thousands of persons whose subscriptions, ranging from one anna to Rs. 100, have so greatly swelled the Jubilee collection, and whose gifts, appearing on other people's cards, have as yet received no personal recognition. A list of the donors and collectors will, her Ladyship states, be forwarded to the Queen-Empress; and Her Majesty's attention will also be drawn to the well-directed efforts and large sums now being spent in various parts of India upon female hospitals.

The Public Service Commission meets at Calcutta on Nov. 15.

Munshi Rahutili Khan, Deputy Collector of Lucknow, is to join Colonel Prideaux in winding up the affairs of the late King of Oudh.

A serious case of dacoity with murder is reported from Jhansi. The dacoits escaped with a thousand rupees.

Sir A. L. Cappel, Director-General of Telegraphs, after leaving Simla, will shortly visit the Punjab, Quetta, Karachi, and Bombay.

The Marine Court of Inquiry into the loss of the B.I.S.N. Co.'s steamer Arcot exonerates the pilot and all officers from blame.

It is understood that Sir Salar Jung has permission to return to Hyderabad.

A batch of 160 horses is to be imported from the Cape for remounts as an experiment.

General Newmarch has retired from the Secretaryship of the Military Department.

A branch of the S.P.C.A. has been formed at Nasik.

Mr. A. P. Howell, of the Central Provinces Commission, returns to his appointment next month. His return to India at all has been hitherto looked on as doubtful.

Genelal Chesney is due in Calcutta on December the 13th, after a tour which includes Rawal Pindi, Abbotabad, the Gullies, Marri, Peshawar, Lundi Kotal, Kohat, and Kushalgurh.

The Hon. D. M. Barbour will not join the Viceroy's Council until the end of March.

Brigadier Nur Mahomed, one of Ayub Khan's followers, who was recently taken prisoner, has been hanged at Herat.

The quarantine restrictions at Aden and Perim have been removed against arrivals from Tonquin.

The P. and O. Company have received a telegram from Suez stating that twenty-four hours' quarantine has been established on vessels arriving at that port from Bombay.

It has been settled that Mr. Charles Hill, Government Prosecutor, of the North-West High Court Bar, will succeed to the first vacant Puisne Judgeship, either at Allahabad or Calcutta. The Chief Justices of both the High Courts are in entire accord as to the suitableness of the arrangement.

Mr. J. J. Heaton has been appointed to act as Under-Secretary to Government in the Political, Judicial, and Educational Departments, and Secretary to the Legislative Council.

The Boundary Commission escort passed through Kandahar on Oct. 22.

The Rajah of Kaparthala, following the Nizam's example, has offered the Viceroy five lakhs of rupees and his services in the cause of his country's defence.

With the object of opening through communication at the beginning of the New Year the Marmagoa Railway Company are pushing on actively the remaining portion of the tunnels which are still incomplete.

The impending Saharunpore settlement is to be committed to Mr. L. A. S. Porter.

Mr. T. W. Holderness, who, upon Mr. Woodburn's return, quits the Secretariat of the North-West Provinces, goes as magistrate and collector to Philibhit.

The appointment of Dr. W. R. Rice, Civil Surgeon of Jubbulpore, to succeed Deputy Surgeon-General Walker as Inspector-General of Hospitals, North-West Provinces, has been gazetted.

Mr. Joseph Janni, Agent of the Austro-Hungarian Lloyd's Steam Navigation Company at Bombay, has received from the Emperor of Austria the decoration of a Knight of the Order of Francis Joseph.

The office of the Engineer-in-Chief of the Madras State Railway Surveys at Bangalore will practically be closed at the end of this month, one or two hands only being still retained for a month longer, to complete some survey tracings and arrange records.

The railroads to Paumben and Palghat have been for long under the consideration of the Madras Government. "But I am not in a position to state," Lord Connemara remarked, in reply to an address at Madura the other day, "that funds will be immediately available for their construction."

The Maharajah Holkar now declares that during his visit to England he was treated in every way as a first class prince of India.

Several piratical attacks have been made recently upon English vessels in the Persian Gulf, the pirates being Arabs. The attention of Sir William White has been called to the attacks, and probably a ship of war will be sent from Bombay.

The Submarine Cables of the Globe.—There are at present ten submarine cables between Europe and North America. Of these, six start from Valentia, Ireland, two from Brest, and two from Penzance. The two latter have a connection with Havre and Emden. South America is joined to Europe by two cables from Lisbon to Pernambuco, Brazil. England has two cables to India, one from Bombay, over Aden to Alexandria and Marseilles, the other from Falmouth and Gibraltar. Between England and France there are eight cables from Dover to Calais. England is further connected by four cables with Germany (Lowestoft-Emden), by two with Norway, two with Holland, one with Lisbon, one with Sweden (Gottenburg), one with Denmark (Londerwig), and one with Belgium (Ostend). The English companies also own the cables between Malta and Tripoli, Malta and Sicily, Alexandria and Otranto, Alexandria and Alep, Alexandria and Port Said, Suez and Aden, Suakim and Jeddah, Madras and Australia over Penang, and Singapore and Java. From this cable a branch goes to Saigon, Hué, and Haiphong. In the Sea of China we find the connections Saigon, Hong Kong, Shanghai, &c. Two cables go to Nagasaki in Japan. On the African coast English companies own the cables from Cadiz to Senegal, Aden to the Cape of Good Hope, Australia to New Zealand. France and Algeria have from Marseilles three cables, and another goes to Spain (Barcelona). Russia has connection with Denmark, Sweden, and by Odessa with Constantinople. The latter cable passes on to Salonica. Austria has a cable from Trieste to Corfu. Of shorter cables may be mentioned that from Otranto to Vallonia (Turkey), and that from Corsica to Sadinia. In America the Antilles are joined with North America by a cable from British Guiana. There is also a cable along the Mexican coast, and a second from Mexico to Chili.

NOTES.

THE news from India to-day by telegrams and Overland Mail is ot quiet, uneventful character. The Viceroy, the Commander-in-Chief, and the Presidency Governors are still on tour.

THE residents and sojourners in Karachi, not content with their efforts to obtain increased railways and other facilities in order to advance the commercial interests of that port, took occasion of Lord Dufferin's visit to ask him to make Karachi the seat of the Government of India. This was an attempt which could not be characterised as being overburdened with modesty. His Excellency, according to the Times correspondent, answered evasively, if suavely. He confessed to a liking to the seaside, but did not care to pledge himself to any promise which he might not be able to fulfil.

HIS Lordship is a humorist as well as a diplomatist, and it is not impossible that the bold request somewhat amused him. But it must have caused considerable bile and wrath in Calcutta and Bombay. Calcutta, of course, has long looked upon itself as the only place fitting for a Viceroy and his Council to meet in; and Bombay, jealous of Calcutta, is still more jealous of Karachi. That port is nearer Aden and England than the island city, and it is quite on the cards that it may yet become the port of departure and arrival for the mails. Bombay has long had this dread hanging over it, but hitherto has succeeded in getting the aspirations of Karachi in that direction damped. To learn, however, now that Karachi aspires, not only to be the mail port of India, but also to be the seat of Government, will cause a consternation amongst the "Ducks" more easily imagined by those who know them than described.

MANY words are being put together by the Sind, Lahore and Bombay papers regarding the proposed Hyderabad. Pachpadra line. The Pioneer has joined in the fray too It says:—

The Hyderabad-Pachpadra proposal is fathered in London by the financial promoters of the Nizam's State Railway, and assisted by merchants interested in the port and trade of Karachi. The notion was—and it is astute even if not practicable—to induce the Maharaja of Jodhpore to assign a sufficient portion of the 10 lakhs per annum which he receives annually from the Government of India, in return for having abolished the salt duties throughout his State, for the purpose of guaranteeing four per cent. per annum on the capital required. But he of Jodhpore may not improbably or unreasonably urge that only a small portion of the line projected would run through his territory, or materially benefit it. The Jodhpore people are believed to know the value of money as well as their neighbours.

BUT with regard to this railway project what answer has been given to the statement of the Sind Gazette, to the effect that in the Government of India's reply rejecting the memorial from Sind relative to it there were two arithmetical blunders amounting to the trifling sum of 70 lakhs made by the Public Works Secretary in his calculations on the cost of construction?

THE Indian Press, Native and European, continue to discuss the question of the Nizam's offer, and as a result the Indian Princes, with one exception, who were expected to follow suit, are hanging back, waiting to know whether the Government intends to accept the proferred gift or not. That exception is the Rajah of Kaparthala, who places at the disposal of the Viceroy five lakhs of rupees. This small Native State has always been true to England since the annexation of the Punjab. During the Mutiny Rajah Randher Sinh led in person a contingent to Oudh, which did good service in the field. It may be remembered that he died on his way to England, to which country he desired to come to pay his respects to Her Majesty. The present Rajah Jogatjit Sinh succeeded him in 1887, being then a minor; but under able and wise counsel the State of Kaparthala is one of the most flourishing in the Punjab. The revenue is about twenty lakhs per annum, so the offer of five lakhs is a very handsome one.

THERE can be no doubt that other Princes and Chiefs will come forward with similar offers if the Paramoun Power consents to accept that of the Nizam and this one of Kaparthala. But, whatever reply be given by the Imperial Government, it must be allowed that the political importance of such gifts being voluntarily proffered cannot be over estimated. As the Times of India well puts it: "They are a splendid answer to the rodomontade of Russian journalists, who are never tired of writing that the Native States are only waiting for Russia to knock at the gates of India as the signal to rise in revolt against the British raj."

A CORRESPONDENT writes to the Allahabad journal that "Simla is a merry place for some of us," and indeed it must be so if what this correspondent states be a fact. He writes: "One more Simla fashion is worthy of record, and that is the custom of inviting ladies without chaperones to dances and dinner parties. Daughters are asked to come without their father or mother, and wives without their husbands." The correspondent adds: "It may be old-fashioned to object to such a custom, and useless withal, for it grows steadily." This is good news for parents and husbands.

WE read that a very commendable attempt on the part of the P. and O. Company to solve the milk difficulty in the interests of their passengers was made on board the Victoria, and ended, sad to say, in failure. A sufficient supply was furnished in London by the Aylesbury Dairy Company for the whole voyage, but the freezing—was it over-freezing?—changed its colour to a dingy pink liquid, with oily particles floating on the top, less palatable both to the taste and eye than that other liquid which it was desired to supplant.

THE Englishman writes:—"The death of late King of Oudh has caused the revival of the old story of the Mutiny, when two English ladies in Lucknow, Mrs. Orr and Miss Jackson, were saved from the massacre through the exertions of the third wife of his Majesty, who, with her son, had been temporarily left at the capital when the King was brought to Calcutta. This Princess and her son, whose long list of names and titles it usually abbreviates to Prince Kamar Kader, and who happens to be the oldest surviving son of the King, are now at Kidderpur, and are preferring a strong claim for the Prince to be recognised as the head of the Royal house."

WHO will succeed Sir Lepel Griffin in the Central India Agency? asks the Pioneer. And it attempts to answer the question in this way:—"To begin with, Colonel Bannerman may not unreasonably expect to return to the appointment in which he is now officiating; for although, as we understand, he was told when taking it that his temporary occupation of it would give him no claim to the substantive post, as a matter of fact in such cases the least such temporary possession does give is a fair claim to be first considered for the permanency. Not Sir Charles Bernard, who, we have reason to believe, will succeed Mr. Cordery at Hyderabad. It might be Mr. Girdlestone, at president Resident in Nepaul, if his health were equal to the duties of the post, and if he were not going on leave to recruit it. It might be Sir Oliver St. John, who would probably give up Baroda unmoved. Perhaps a comparative junior, a man of the stamp of Captain Barr, say, who is in charge of Rewah, might come to the front in the comparative dearth of tried politicals in the regular line. And perhaps an outsider, like Colonel Ward, who has done well amid unique difficulties in Bhopal, may be included among the possible men."

IT is to be hoped that whoever is to be appointed the new Governor of Malta he will make himself acquainted with a pamphlet by Sir Victor Houlton, G.C.M.G., who was Chief Secretary to the Government there from 1855 to 1883. In this pamphlet, entitled "A New Constitution for Malta," Sir Victor pleads in temperate and truthful language the wishes of the loyal people of Malta. What the Maltese are desirous of obtaining—and for which they have so often appealed in vain—is a greater control over their own purely local and domestic affairs, and the expenditure of their own local revenue. Their aspirations are limited to this concession on the part of Her Majesty's Government, and this granted "no condition which Her Majesty's Government would think it necessary to lay down for the security of the fortress would appear to them to be onerous or in any way unacceptable." Sir Victor Houlton is unquestionably the greatest living authority on Malta and the Maltese, and it is possible that the recommendation contained in the pamphlet may induce Government to listen to the appeal of these loyal, inoffensive, and industrious people for moderate self-government, extending only to their local and domestic affairs.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, Nov. 20.

The accounts of the Viceroy's winter tour have occupied much space in the local newspapers during the past week. While at Kurrachee His Excellency inspected the harbour works and defences, laid the foundation-stone of the new Scinde College, and replied to a number of addresses presented by various sections of the community. One of these addresses suggested that Kurrachee should be made the capital of India, as being the seaport nearest to England. To this request Lord Dufferin returned an evasive answer, saying that, while he personally liked to be near the sea, he always abstained from raising hopes which he might not be able to gratify. Speaking at the Scinde College, he bore testimony to Lord Reay's sympathy with the cause of education, and his desire to promote it in India.

On returning from Quetta the members of the Viceregal party proceeded to Dera-Ghazi-Khan, whence they will go along the frontier to Peshawur. There a grand durbar will be held on Friday, which, it is expected, will be especially interesting and important, as, with the exception of Lord Ripon's visit of a few hours in 1882, no Viceroy has been at Peshawur since 1870.

To-morrow Sir A. C. Lyall will make over the charge of the offices of Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces and Chief Commissioner of Oude to Sir A. Colvin at Allahabad, and, after a short visit to Lord Reay at Bombay, will leave India on December 2. In him the Bengal Civil Service loses one of its most intellectual and cultivated members, while the country loses an officer who has served with great ability for over thirty years, who has held some of the highest and most important appointments, and who has won a literary reputation hardly inferior to his reputation as an administrator. During the five and a-half years of his rule in the North-Western Provinces he appears to have won the regard of all classes, and the Native community is already taking steps to mark its sense of his services by some fitting testimonial.

Mr. Paul, Deputy-Commissioner of Darjeeling, has now returned from his official visit to Sikhim. He appears to have failed to induce the Rajah to leave Tibet and return to his own country. The Rajah at first promised everything, but he alleged various pretexts for delay, and finally flatly refused to leave Tibet, saying that he had promised the Tibetans, to whom he owed duty and obedience, not to leave before a certain day. It is not known whether the Indian Government means to take any further steps.

It is reported from Darjeeling that large quantities of excellent Tibetan wool are being brought in there, and are finding a ready sale at from sixteen to eighteen rupees per maund of eighty pound.

BURMA.

RANGOON, Nov. 19.

General Wolseley has sent Colonel Stewart, of the 7th Bengal Cavalry, to Myingyan to scour thoroughly the Samon and Paralang jungles for dacoits. The country between Ava and Myingyan is disturbed by dacoit bands, and General White is organising a system of posts and patrols to encircle them, and secure their capture or surrender. Bojayaga, who is now probably the most important dacoit leader in the field, is reported to be in the south of the Kyouksay district with a small band. The Rangoon Times of November 15th announced that dacoits were tearing up the railway in the Kyouksay district. The military authorities deny this statement, and declare that not a single yard of railway has been torn up.

It is reported that Mulligan, the soldier of the Royal Scots Fusiliers now awaiting trial for murdering two corporals of the same regiment, has stated that he belonged to the Invincibles, and has declared that he can give important information connected with the Phœnix Park murders. Little weight appears to be attached to Mulligan's statements. They are generally regarded as being made merely to try to save his life.

The Chief Commissioner's proposed visit to Upper Burma has been deferred owing to the approaching visit to Rangoon of Mr. Scoble, legal member of the Government of India, who will arrive there on the 28th inst.

AFGHANISTAN AND BELOOCHISTAN.

CALCUTTA, Nov. 20.

News received from Persia confirms the report that Ayoub Khan's surrender was arranged through Hassim Khan, who was formerly a close adherent of his father, Shere Ali. A telegram from Quetta states that the surrender has profoundly discouraged the Ghilzai refugees in Beloochistan, who had hoped that his success might enable them to return home. They are now again petitioning for lands on which to settle. All is quiet in Southern and Western Afghanistan. The Ameer appears to have abandoned the idea of a visit to Candahar. It was reported that the Ameer had remitted the extra taxes recently imposed on the Ghilzais, but it is now stated that they are being collected with increased severity. The efforts to raise new Durani regiments at Candahar seem unsuccessful, and owing to the difficulty of obtaining recruits the standard has been lowered.

The Viceroy and Lady Dufferin, with Sir F. Roberts, General Elles, Adjutant General, Sir Theodore Hope, and Mr. Durand, Foreign Secretary, paid a flying visit to Quetta last week. They travelled up by the Lurna line on Wednesday. Lady Dufferin went straight to Quetta. The rest of the party, with Sir O. St. John, went on to Gulistan, and rode on Tuesday to the summit of the Khojak Pass, Lord Dufferin having thus an opportunity of inspecting in company with engineers and his military advisers the new road and the line of the proposed railway. He reached Quetta the same afternoon, and after a drive round the place next morning returned to India vid the Bolan. At the railway station he received an address in Persian from the principal Afghan and Belooch residents, expressing contentment with British rule and loyalty to Her Majesty. The Viceroy replied briefly in the same language. He said he felt pleasure at seeing them and the country, and promised to send a fuller reply.

There is every reason to believe that this short visit will be of great value, as it enabled the Viceroy to see the country with his own eyes and to form his own opinion as to its wants and wishes. It is believed that the section of the Bolan railway from Hirsk to Darwaza, which is now narrow gauge, will shortly be converted into broad gauge on the Abt system, as used on some European mountain railways. An experimental trial of the system for one mile has already been ordered. The telegraph is about to be extended from Jumrood to Lund-i-Kotal, at the western end of the Khyber.

GOOD NEWS FROM MADRAS.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—The best reform made by the Indian Government of late years has been the reduction of the excessive tax on salt, so necessary in hot India for the preservation of the health of man and beast.

But few ventured to foresee that a wise policy would enormously increase the fish supply. In 1875—twelve years ago—under the blind cruel salt policy no fish was reported to have been cured; in 1876 324 tons were cured; last year, in 143 licensed yards, no less than 30,373 tons, or upwards of sixty million lbs. of fish were cured!

Consider what an increase to the supply of food for the people this has been! Truly Madras is proving that she is becoming enlightened and is wide awake, but she must not rest contented. The fish trade in India is capable of immense expansion. In the Calicut division cheap fish may make the fanatical Moplahs less discontented. Accurate reports regarding the trade in India and in Burma would astonish the good people of England; perhaps our statesman, Sir Lyon Playfair, will enlighten them.—Your obedient servant,

T.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The British Goverament is, on the whole, popular in India, and deserves to be so. Of the popularity there can be as little question as of the desert. Notwithstanding the grumbling of the educated classes on the subject of employment from which, as we have before shown, they debar themselves by the price they ask; notwithstanding occasional gusts of popular feeling like the present uneasiness among Sikhs, or the wave of fanaticism which is passing over the Hindus; notwithstanding occasional differences of opinion or sentiment, such as must arise between highly civilised rulers and less enlightened subjects, the British Government earns credit and goodwill by its single-minded efforts for the public good. And it is because those efforts have been single-minded; have aimed at the public good only, and have not been directed to catching fleeting popularity, that the Government has obtained in the minds of the people credit for good intentions, reputation for far-seeing wisdom, and goodwill for benefits conferred. There are three great measures of reform in progress, or imminent in this country. They are the prohibition of infant marriage, the conservation of forests and waste lands, and the restriction of the right of alienation of agricultural holdings. The first will deliver a great mass of suffering female humanity from miserable widowhood, and often equally miserable wifehood. The second will avert ruin from, or will restore, large tracts of sub-montane country, relieve the dearth of pasture and fuel through extensive districts, and permit of better cultivation by well-irrigation, by good ploughing, and by use of manure. The third will arrest a process whereby land is, in many parts of the country, passing rapidly out of the hands of the agriculturists and will discourage the ruinous extravagance in litigation and other follies whereby those agriculturists deliver themselves as bond slaves into the hands of the money-lender. All of these are measures which have long been maturing, which have been deeply considered in all their bearings, regarding the necessity of which there is a wide agreement among administrators, but which are, nevertheless, disliked and heartily opposed by the classes affected, and which will certainly create unpopularity if not actual discontent. Our argument is that the unpopularity will not endure; that the measures are right and wise, and will eventually commend themselves to the people as such; that such being the case temporary discontent may be safely disregarded; and that to court popular popularity at the expense of good government is to court a thing which is of no value to us as regards dangers from without, and which, as regards India itself, may be disregarded. British rule in India is founded deep down upon the universal conviction that any possible change must be for the worse. No surface breeze of popularity or the reverse can disturb an edifice so deeply rooted. It may be disturbed by danger from without, but from that only our own right hands can guard us.

OFFICERING THE NATIVE ARMY.

(Times of India.)

Lieutenant L. M. Foster, Adjutant of the 28th Bombay Infantry, has penned an interesting pamphlet on the question of officering the Native army. He points out the two main defects of the present system, namely, that non-commissioned officers are promoted to commissions when too old, and that non-commissioned officers promoted from the ranks of their regiment have little or no authority over the men they command. Two schemes have been put forward to remedy the above state of matters, firstly, that non-commissioned officers recommended for promotion should be promoted out of their regiments, and, secondly, that a military college should be established for the preparation of men recommended for promotion to commissions. The first proposal is to be objected to, inasmuch as commanding officers who have had the trouble of training and making good non-commissioned officers would be reluctant to lose them and give some other regiment the benefit of their training. To the second suggestion the question of expense bars the way for the present. Lieutenant Foster, however, advocates a combination of the two above schemes as both feasible and financially possible. He would have a depôt or veteran battalion formed with fixed head-quarters at some large and central camp, the number of rank and file requisite for the formation of this battalion to be collected from the first eight or ten regiments on the roster for service. To the depot battalion thus formed five British officers should be appointed, namely, a commandant, two wing commanders, an adjutant, and a quarter-master. This battalion would be the training school of all Native non-commissioned officers and men recommended for commissions. The course of instruction would be both practical and theoretical, and would last at least three years, examinations being held at stated intervals for promotion through the several non-commissioned grades. Among the advantages claimed for this system are the following:—(1) That the Native army would be officered by young and energetic men, thoroughly acquainted with all the duties of their profession; (2) that having been only five years in the ranks and three years away from their regiments the Native officers would form a distinct body by themselves, being more on an equality with the British officers of the regiment, and not associating so closely with the men they have to command; and (3) that the expense compared to erecting a college and maintaining a suitable establishment and staff would be slight. As a contribution to a difficult question, and one urgently calling for reform, Lieutenant Foster's pamphlet deserves consideration at the hands of the military authorities.

ASSISTANT-ADJUTANT-GENERALS.

(Pioneer.)

The ruling under the new Warrant that no officer with less than three years' rank as Lieutenant-Colonel is to be considered eligible for Staff employment as Assistant Adjutant-General and posts higher than this, will affect the prospects of officers in India very materially indeed. As a matter of fact the application of this provision of the Warrant to India would result in a serious deterioration of the Staff, for the picked men who are now chosen for the Staff are, as a rule, well below the rank of Lieut.-Colonel. We venture to say that in no army in the world is so much attention paid to using good men just when they are at their best; whereas if the rank of Lieut.-Colonel of three years' service in that grade is to be made a sine qua non for the important posts, there will be such a small field for selection that the work cannot possibly be discharged efficiently. It may be all very well in England, where the duties in peace time are light and of the easiest routine kind, to have only senior officers on the Staff; but here in India the conditions are entirely different, and we want officers in their prime. The lessons taught by the Mutiny, where, in a few weeks, the old officers broke down and disappeared altogether, giving place to younger men, should not be forgotten. The system at that time was one in which seniority counted for everything, and the results in some instances were most disastrous. A large proportion of staff officers have to be drawn from the Staff Corps, and save where a man has been lucky in his brevets, the Army under the new Warrant will have its upper grades in the Staff filled with officers of 30 years' service and upwards. Now, no one will pretend that after so long a time spent in a tropical climate, an officer can have left that energy and strength which, above all things, are needed on the Staff. There are majors commanding regiments at the present time with captains as seconds-in-command, the supply of officers of about 18 or 20 years' service being very large, and it is these which form the backbone of the Staff Corps. Most of them have had practical experience in the field; their keenness for soldiering is as great as ever; their ambition has been stimulated by what they have gone through; and it is from these that the Staff should be recruited. In British regiments, of course, where there has been a run of promotion, young Lieut.-Colonels can be found; but a stop has now been put to this promotion, and in a few years we shall see that the age of a regimental Lieut.-Colonel will again become pretty much what it was in past days. We think, therefore, it would be most impolitic for the provisions of the Warrant to be rigidly enforced in India—it would not only weaken the personnel of the Staff, but would close the career which is now open to officers who by ability and good service have recommended themselves for special employment. At the present moment most strenuous efforts are being made to render the Army in India a model of efficiency, and we can imagine no greater check being given to it than to fill the higher staff appointments with officers who have passed their best. It is to be hoped that the Horse Guards will see the matter in this light, or, when troublous times come, the weakness of the military machine in India will become painfully apparent.

THE TRUTH ABOUT DHULIP SINGH'S CLAIMS.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

As articles have been published by several of our Native contemporaries in different parts of India, including the Punjab, giving very garbled versions of the Maharaja Dhulip Singh's claims against the British Government, we trust they will listen to what we know to be the true facts of the case. To understand on which side justice lies a threefold division of the question at issue must be made, and on each of these we purpose to show that the Maharaja has not the slightest shadow of a ground for complaint. The threefold division of the Maharaja's claims is as follows:—(1), the claims connected with his pension under the Lahore agreement of 1849; (2), the claims to the "ancestral private estates" of Ranjit Singh; (3), the claims for the Fatehgarh estate, and compensation for property destroyed thereon in the Mutiny. Taking the total amount spent by Government, upon the pensions and allowances to Dhulip Singh, his family and followers, as well as the servants of the State, since 1849, we find that it amounts to four lakhs a year; while since 1860 it has been more than four and a half lakhs a year. In 1863 he was granted a loan of £10,000 on the security of a mortgage, which he never executed, though he spent the money. Four years later he received another loan of £28,000 on simila ecurity, which he also failed to produce, though he spent the money. In 1875 his life was insured for £100,000, Government paying half the cost; and in the four years following he received two more loans of £10,000 and £3,000, on neither of which did he pay any interest. In spite of this frequent assistance the affairs of the Maharaja went, through extravagance and mismanagement, from bad to worse, till in 1882 it was found necessary to pass an Act of Parliament to put things straight; and at the same time £47,000 more was lent to Dhulip Singh without interest, making altogether £198,000, or—including the payment made in 1863—£303,000, beyond the terms of the original arrangement. By the Act of Parliament the Government gave up its claims to interest on the loans of 1878, 1879, and 1882; guaranteed to maintain the insurance policies (£100,000), the Maharaja paying half the premium, promised not to recover the principal of the loans until after Dhulip Singh's death; assured the interest of £200,000 to his eldest son, of £100,000 to the Maharani, and of £172,000 among the younger children. This was the last and final concession of the British Government, bringing up the total amount paid since 1849 to more than the four lakhs agreed upon, and since 1860 to more than four and a half lakhs. Thus we see that so far as the first of the three claims of the Maharaja are concerned Government has been not only just, but generous.

THE ARMIES OF THE NATIVE STATES.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The condition of the armies of the Native States—and that of Hyderabad must certainly not be excepted—brings no more credit to the Government of India than to the States themselves. If many of them are armed in such a fashion as to be a terror to no one but themselves, this is in a very large degree because the past mistaken policy of the Government has been designed to let things be so. It is not, as all the world knows, because the Nizam prefers an army carrying smooth-bored muzzle-loaders that his troops are armed with these comparatively harmless weapons. "For arms," said a recent Administration Report, "the line regiments are supplied, some with city made muskets and bayonets, some with the old Brown Bess from the British arsenal, and some with ancient flint lock muskets, the Brown Bess being the only weapon safe to use." Now if Sir Frederick Roberts is to act on the invitation which is held out to him by the Times all this must be changed. If we are to avail ourselves of offers of military co-operation like that which the Nizam has twice made, we must no longer stand in the way, as the policy of the past has been, of a reasonably efficient arming of the troops of our allies and feudatories. The appeal which Mr. Mehdi Ali made in our columns nearly three years ago to the Government of India came to this:—"We offer our help, but before asking you to accept it we ask you to see to it that it shall be a help worth having." It would be trifling with the Native States, and it would be taking upon ourselves an embarrassing burden, to accept any offer of military co-operation without at once taking measures for putting the troops placed at our disposal into a state of efficiency. There must be at least a hundred thousand men in these armies who, with proper training, might be formed into an available fighting force. The Nizam's offer has given the Government of India an opportunity of dealing with this question on the lines of a broad and sympathetic policy. If they still shrink from accepting a principle which certainly implies much confidence in the Native States then they must confront this awkward dilemma. If these armies cannot be sufficiently trusted in time of peace to be properly armed and properly organised, then they cannot be trusted when the enemy is at the gates, and it will be necessary to weaken our forces on the frontier in order to watch the foes within our walls. What, in that case, should we save by our timidity?

THE NAVAL DEFENCES OF INDIA.

(Englishman.)

It may be urged that the East Indian Squadron is at present so insignificant that it is useless to worry about its repair, and as it is certain that a fleet of antiquated vessels, some of which are being sold, practically, for firewood, and whose flagship is an unarmoured corvette, could never resist the attack of a single ironclad, not to mention a modern fleet, it is unnecessary to have appliances above their requirements. But it is to be hoped that India would have a better fleet in time of war, and even as it is there is no means of repairing all the vessels on the station. The Bacchante, an unarmoured corvette of 4,140 tons, cannot be docked at any port in India, and some years ago, the Euryalus, a corvette of the same tonnage, had to go all the way to Malta for repairs. It is a fact, though an incredible one, that there is at the present moment no British port between Malta and Hong Kong where an ironclad can be docked, or even, as we have stated above, one of the largest unarmoured corvettes. Would any country but England, under similar circumstances, allow a similar state of affairs to continue for a single year? It cannot be wondered at that the Admiralty shrink from sending powerful vessels to the East India Squadron where there is no means of attending to them when damaged.

We have been so accustomed to peace in these waters that we fail to realise how terribly weak we should be in time of war. The increasing civilisation of India, of which we boast, has the effect of rendering her more liable to be mixed up in European quarrels, and it is far from improbable that the coast of India might be made the object of attack by a hostile squadron. In that case our fleet, whether weak or strong, would have to engage it. Take the case, for instance, of an attack on Bombay, perhaps the most exposed port in India. The fleet would move out to fight, and that fight, however, it resulted, would be sure to put one or two of our vessels temporarily hors de combat. With a proper dockyard in Bombay these damages could be quickly repaired, and the ships rendered fit for service again. But under present conditions, with the Suez Canal blocked, Hong Kong would be the only possible port where a disabled man-of-war could go for repairs. But it would be utterly impossible for a single crippled ship to reach Hong Kong, even as a matter of seamanship alone, without considering other difficulties. With damages sufficient to require its going into dock, the vessel could not live the distance, because it would probably be broken up by the force of the waves, even if it would float, before it had been at sea a week, and the progress of a ship in such a state would be very slow. Moreover, a beaten fleet would be eagerly on the look-out for possible reprisals, and the prospect of capturing the cripple would be too good to be lost.

It would, therefore, result in this, that the ironclad or corvette would have to lie up in Bombay harbour, unrepaired, rather than risk loss by attempting to reach China, and consequently its services would be completely lost till the end of the war. The exact position of the dockyard in Bombay harbour is one that must be left to experts; but we sincerely trust that the site chosen will be one well up the harbour, and not near the mouth, and exposed to the guns of an enemy's fleet, as are the present dockyards. Surely a site at the back of Hog Island would be of the greatest value for such a purpose, as offering perfect safety from the enemy's fire so long as the defences remained intact. We believe that the proposal has been favourably received at home, and the sooner the dockyard is completed the better for India's chances of defence during the next big war in which she has to take part.

BENGAL.

The Calcutta Scotchmen have already decided to celebrate the anniversary of their patron saint. The dinner will be held on St. Andrew's day at the Town Hall, Sir Alexander Wilson in the chair. An executive committee, with Mr. C. J. G. Paterson as honorary Secretary, was appointed to carry out the necessary arrangements.

The Bengal Board of Revenue has directed that the annual inspection report of a Commissioner of Divisions should show that he has satisfied himself by inspection that all parts of the excise system are in proper working order, and should call attention to any points in which the excise administration of the district is not in a satisfactory state.

Sir Steuart Bayley has paid Mr. Veasy, the Inspector-General of Police in Bengal, a considerable compliment on the manner in which he has managed his department, and the way in which he has prepared his report. In his resolution on the report his Honour says:—"The Lieutenant-Governor has to thank Mr. Veasy for his interesting and valuable report. The reports, figures, and returns from different divisions have been dealt with in an intelligent manner, and it is evident that they have been scrutinized with great care. Attention to mere figures has been discouraged, and sustained and steady work is singled out for praise. Sir Steuart Bayley has no doubt that all branches of the police administration have benefited by the interest evinced in it, and by the searching supervision exercised by him."

The indigo brokers report that the October sowings in Lower Bengal are now in progress, and are reported to be doing well. Good rain fell last week over all the districts of Behar, and enough moisture has been secured for the spring sowings. A good many boiling musters have arrived from Behar, but it is feared that the quality of the crop will not be so good as that of last year. About 500 chests of Native indigo have arrived in the Calcutta market, and though the quality is not so good as that of the early arrivals of last season, it is mostly dry and of a useful coloury description; no business has, however, yet been done.

MADRAS.

Consequent on the approaching return of Lord Connemara, Government House at Madras has been thoroughly renovated, and many improvements and changes effected by the Public Works Department. The unsightly building occupied by one of His Excellency's Staff, and which was always an eyesore to the Banqueting Hall, has been converted into a large, spacious, and airy two-storied building, and a swimming bath, similar to that at Guindy Park, has been built for the use of the Governor.

From the report of the audit of the Madras Administrator-

General's accounts for the six months ending 31st December, 1886, we learn that the net income of the Administrator-General during the six months was Rs. 5,426 1-9, giving a monthly income of Rs. 904 5-7½. The total commission derived from the estates and trusts, including fees, was Rs. 7,019-8-8. Government have sanctioned the usual payment of Rs. 500 to the Administrator-General for the preparation of the half-yearly schedules.

Mr. A. Rea, First Assistant, Archæological Survey, Madras, recently inspected and excavated some ancient burial places at Dadampatti, Paravai, near Thovarimon, Anapanadi, near Madura, and the cromlechs near Kodaikanal. He made a splendid collection of ancient pottery, and in some of the tombs found a large number of bones, also a complete human skull; the latter had been filled up and enclosed in soft clay, so that its contour and characteristics are perfectly preserved. He considers it a very important find, as it may be of use in throwing more light on the people who used these remains. He also brought away a small specimen of a pyriform tomb. While at Madura he took the opportunity of having the Brahmanical caves and Jain sculptures at Annamalai surveyed.

From the Sanitary Commissioner's returns of vital statistics in the districts and municipalities of the Madras Presidency for the month of June last it appears that, in the period under report cholera carried off 1,424 individuals in the districts, a larger number than in any of the previous months of the year.

BOMBAY.

In view of the approaching departure of Mr. and Mrs. Wordsworth for Europe a reception was given in their honour on Wednesday afternoon (November 2) by Rukhmabai at the bungalow of Mr. Muncherjee Bhowagree, C.I.E., at Breach Candy, at which a large number of the friends of Rukhmabai, European and Native, were present.

The police in the Siruma Taluka of the Nassick district have got into a difficulty. Some days ago a theft was committed at the village of Musalgaum, and the police arrested a man in connection with it. The accused, however, died while in the custody of the police, and, it is alleged, from the effects of the maltreatment he was subjected to at their hands. Mr. Henderson, the district superintendent of police, Nassick, proceeded to the spot, and after making inquiries into the case, he supended from duty the Chief Constable of the Taluka, Mr. Venaik Balcrishna Phalgoone, and the subordinates who were engaged in investigating the case. He has also given sanction for their prosecution. The Chief Constable contends that the man died from cholera while in his custody.

We (Bombay Gazette) have been asked to call attention to an importation into Bombay of "play counters," which, however innocent their intention, are likely to be taken by the unwary for four anna pieces. They are of German silver, and exactly the size of four-anna pieces, though they have not the nicked edge of that coin. On one side is a representation of the Queen's head, with the inscription "Victoria Empress 1885." On the reverse the use of the coin—if such it can be called—is candidly indicated in the words "Play Counters." It is as well that the public should be on their guard against a very colourable imitation of a current coin.

It is stated that the present Mint Master of Hyderabad has submitted, for the approval of his Highness the Nizam, a specimen of the improved Halli Sicca Rupee he proposes to introduce. The coin is of the same thickness as its British Government representative, and has also its merry ring. The weight remains the same, namely, eleven mashas, being half a masha less than the British coin. Its diameter is slightly smaller. The edges are milled, but there is no embossment either on the obverse or reverse, except words similar to those on the current rupee. Ten samples were struck off, most of which have been sent by his Highness to the leading personages of the State for their opinion. Several designs had, for a series of years, been placed by the late Mr. Scrivens before the Government in connection with the reorganisation of the Mint, for which he had been specially engaged, but nothing seemed to have come of his labours.

Fashionable Marriage at Poona.—On Saturday afternoon, Oct. 29, at St. Paul's Church, the marriage of Colonel J. G. Lindsay, Royal Engineers, Chief Engineer and Agent Southern Mahratta Company's Railways, son of the late Colonel Lindsay, C.B., 78th Highlanders, and Miss Stewart, daughter of Mr. T. H. Stewart, Bombay Civil Service, Commissioner of Survey and Settlement in the Bombay Presidency, was celebrated. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion. The bridegroom was dressed in the uniform of the Royal Engineers, and attended, as best man, by Major Bisset, R.E. The bride was attended by Miss Wardrop, who was attired in white and primrose. The bridal dress was of rich white corded silk, with court train and panels of pearl embroidery, the veil being fastened back with diamond crescent, star and spray, the gifts of the bridegroom. The service, which was choral, was impressively performed by the Rev. G. Gothard, M.A., Chaplain of St. Paul's. At its conclusion the guests, some seventy in number, repaired to No. 91 Civil Lines, the temporary residence of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart. The presents were over one hundred in number, and were very handsome, the jewellery especially attracting much admiration. The cake was a triumph of Buszard's (of Oxford-street, London). The health of the bride and bridegroom was proposed in a neat speech by Major General Solly-Flood, and was suitably responded to by Colonel Lindsay. The happy couple then drove away, amid loud cheers, to the train which was to convey them to Khandalla, en route for Upper India, where the honeymoon will be spent. The bride's travelling dress was of pale heliotrope with bonnet to match. One of the most pleasing features of the occasion was the presence, at the church, and at the house, of a large number of native employés of the Southern Mahratta Country Railway system, who poured flowers into the carriage as it arrived.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH AND PUNJAB.

H.H. the Maharajah of Benares entertains all the Officials of the Benares Division to a banquet, in honour of Sir Alfred Lyall, on the 8th inst. The gathering will be a large one. A proposal for a public dinner to Sir Alfred Lyall and an evening entertainment to Sir Alfred and Lady Lyall, prior to their leaving India next month, is influentially furthered in Allahabad.

Before the Punjab Government left Simla matters had been put in train for the settlement of the difficulty about the strength of the Chief Court Bench. It was recognised that the first duty of Government was to take steps for the immediate removal of the block in the business of the Court, and to give litigants a prospect of having their pending cases decided within a reasonable time. With this object two temporary Judges were to be appointed, and it was confidently expected that when the Court opened after the vacation, as it did on the 17th instant, it would have a strength of six Judges. But a hitch appears to have occurred somewhere, and the latest information is that the sanction of the Secretary of State has not yet been received, although all arrangements have been made in anticipation. It is to be trusted that the period of suspense will not be prolonged.

The sales of pictures at the Simla Fine Arts Exhibition amounted this year to a little over Rs. 3,000 as against Rs. 4,600 last year. The sum realised by admission at the door was more by Rs. 100 than on the last occasion, and even more than in 1885 when the Exhibition was held in the Telegraph Office.

Travellers who have come from Bokhara and the Khanates under Russia report that between forty and fifty thousand labourers are employed on the railway works between Oxus and Samarkhand, and that the works are being pushed forward with the greatest energy. The number of labourers given here may appear large, but it must be remembered that, when the railway was being extented from Kizil Arva to Dushakh, Merv, and Charju three to four battalions of the railway troops were employed on this duty, as well as twenty-five thousand coolies, in a quarter where workmen were not and could not be procured in such numbers as in the state of Bokhara. Russia is preparing very quietly and steadily for the next opening of the Eastern as well as the Afghan question.

The electric light has been introduced into the East Indian Railway colleries at Giridhi by the manager, Mr. Walter Saise, M.I.C.E., F.G.S., and marks the opening of a new era in Indian mining. The machine used is a 30-lamp dynamo, worked by a two-and-a-half horse-power vertical engine, which is supplied by steam from the pit-winding engine boilers, so that the cost of working is practically nil. The lamps are of the usual incandescent form, with carbon filaments in hermetically sealed vacuum globes, which give a brilliant, steady light. The miners are said to be delighted with the innovation, and go to their work with greater confidence than before.

Among the many Christmas novelties with which the shops are decorated at this festive season may be specially mentioned the chocolate confectionery of Messrs. Fry and Sons, of Bristol, who instead of crying out against Free Trade, set resolutely to work, erected new factories, each possessing its own steam power, and increased the staff, which now numbers over 1,200 hands; the female contingent, mostly girls, being more than a moiety. The fancy confectionery manufactured by this firm challenges comparison with the productions of the Maison Boissier in the Boulevarde des Italiens in Paris. The Chocolate Creams and Snowballs possess a delicious flavour, while the latter is a novel confection. Then there is the Tangerine biscuit—the perfection of a sweetmeat—together with numerous other varieties, all put up in delicate cabinets, tiny straw baskets, brightly tinted boxes, decked with gay satins and resplendent in silken cord. These preparations possess two advantages, which will recommend them to paterfamilias—purity and cheapness. Fry's pure concentrated cocoa is recommended by the medical profession and press as being the most nutritious and easily digestible preparation extant, and well adapted for the Anglo-Indian constitution. Messrs. Fry and Sons look forward to the day when the English will appreciate how charming a luncheon is afforded by a stick of chocolate and a hunch of fine white bread.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

It is understood that Surgeon C. J. Addison, Army Medical Staff, is to be transferred at once from Quetta to Ambala. Dr. Addison's name will be remembered in connection with the Ambulance Association which he established at Quetta.

The Inspector-General of Ordnance, Bengal Circle, has proceeded on tour of inspection from Calcutta.

The 23rd and 32nd Pioneers are to employed in Peshin next year under the Military Works Department.

Captain Mason, R.E., has been placed under orders for duty in the Bengal Presidency.

Captain Wright, R.A., proceeds from Mian Mir to Malta to join No. 2-1 Northern Division, R.A., into which he has been promoted.

Colonel Haughton, R.A., having elected to retire from the Service on completion of five years' service as a Lieutenant-Colonel, proceeds home at once.

Colonel Bally, 1st Battalion West Riding Regiment, has been placed on half-pay, completing six years as regimental Lieutenant-Colonel.

Captain R. H. Daniell, 5th Bombay Cavalry, has been appointed to be Commandant of the Governor's Body Guard, vice Major W. Mayne.

Leave out of India on private affairs has been granted to Lieut. G. G. J. S. Jones, S.C., Adjutant Deoli Irregular Force, and Major B. G. Humphry, S.C., Second in Command 10th Bombay Light Infantry, for one year.

Lieut. Harry Lawrence Gordon, 2nd Durham Light Infantry, has been appointed a Probationer for the Bombay Staff Corps.

The Cavalry Camp of Exercise, which was to have been held in the Central Provinces, is not now likely to come off.

The 1st and 2nd Battalions 4th Gurkhas will move into a standing camp at Madhapur for the ensuing winter months.

Captain Beaufort, R.A., has been appointed to officiate as Commandant of No. 1 Bengal Mounted Battery, vice Captain C. P Triscott, on leave.

The following appointments have been made :—

25th Punjab Infantry: Lieut.-Colonel E. W. Smyth, to be Second in Command, consequent on Colonel A. J. Birch's return from furlough. 32nd Pioneers: Lieutenant H. R. Brander to be Adjutant, vice Lieutenant E. De Brath, vacated on promotion; and Lieutenant J. J. Digan to be Quartermaster. 42nd Gurkha Light Infantry: Captain C. H. Westmoreland, 9th Bengal Infantry, to be officiating Wing Commander. 20th Punjab Infantry: Captain W. O. Harris, Wing Officer, to be Wing Commander, vice Major G. M. D. Hill, who retires from Nov. 1.

Artillery practice on a large scale is to be carried out at Kirkee in January next, when five horse batteries will be concentrated. Then there are to be also siege operations with the garrison artillery and Sappers and Miners. This would be a good opportunity for a couple of gun detachments of the Bombay Artillery Volunteers to learn some of their work.

The men of the 17th Native Infantry, who have recently been removed from Bombay to Mhow, have been set a task in their new station which they by no means relish. They received orders the other day to construct new lines, either for their own or another regiment, and they are now busily engaged making mud bricks. These, when dry, they are to carry to the chosen site of the proposed new lines, and with them erect the huts.

The move of the 1st Battalion King's Own Yorkshire Light Infantry from Rangoon to Bombay by sea has not given satisfaction to the regiment, as all the heavy baggage and the most of the men's kits, not to speak of the wives and children, are at Dinapore, where the most of their property will either have to be thrown away or sold for a song.

Some changes in the Military Accounts Departments are expected to take place early this month. It is expected that Captain Lewis, on return from furlough, will be appointed Pay Examiner, Bombay, vice Major Sawyer, who will take up Commissariat duties. Colonel Cooper will be confirmed as Controller, Military Accountant, vice Colonel Hurlock Pritchard, promoted to Account-General, Military Department. This will give a step to the several grades, and will necessitate some movements of officers from one duty to another.

Officers of the British Army allowed to select chargers will be required to pay Rs. 700 for an Australian horse, except when the selection is made from the ranks by an officer of the Royal Artillery, in which case the price shall be Rs. 600. Recoveries will be effected from the officer's pay and allowances, commencing from the first issue of pay after the horse has been selected, in four equal monthly instalments from field officers, captains and paymasters, and in eight equal instalments from subalterns, ridingmasters, quartermasters, and veterinary surgeons. Horses of any other breed than Australians will be paid for at Rs. 600, irrespective of the place of selection or of the branch of the Service to which the selecting officer belongs.

The tablet which the friends of the late Lieutenant-General T. F. Wilson are about to erect to his memory will be placed in St. Peter's Church, Fort William, in front of the chancel, and between the pulpit and the seat in which the General usually sat. "His long and varied military service," to quote the words of the inscription, "his distinguished share in the defence of the Lucknow Residency in 1857, and his tenure for nearly five years of a seat in the Supreme Council in India, made memorable a public career which extended over nearly half a century, and was within a few weeks of its close in this country when cut short by death." A sum of Rs. 1,500, part of the memorial fund, will be made over to the Commanding Officer of the 7th Bengal Cavalry —a regiment which General Wilson once commanded—to be invested in Government Securities for providing a musketry prize to be shot for annually by the men.

A General scheme for the reorganisation of the medical arrangements in Biluchistan has been formulated and sanctioned. The Residency Surgeon, Quetta, will be the controlling medical authority throughout the Biluchistan Agency, to supervise all civil medical arrangements and issue instructions to medical officers attached to the different civil charges in that Agency. The distribution of work between medical officers will also rest with the Residency Surgeon, and the duties of the medical officers at Sibi and on the Sind-Peshin and Bolan State Railways will also be settled by him in consultation with the local railway authorities. The dispensaries in the Agency are to be under the Residency Surgeon, and are to be open for patients directly connected with railway works and generally for the sick of all other public works, including men employed on the railway and roads, the police and small detached political establishments. These institutions should also afford relief to the sick in the bazaars and to the sick among discharged labourers. The distribution of dispensaries and the number of servants to be employed in the institutions will be left to the discretion of the Residency Surgeon, and will be settled by him in consultation with the medical officer in charge.

Furlough for Non-Commissioned Officers.

With the approval of the Secretary of State for India, the Government of India have sanctioned, as an experimental measure, the grant of furlough to England for six months to non-commissioned officers and men of British regiments and batteries serving in India, who have twelve years' service, and who may re-engage to complete twenty-one years, on the conditions stated below :—

I.—That the grant of furlough shall not be claimable as a right, but is only admissible on the recommendation of commanding officers.

II.—That paid acting non-commissioned officers will not be appointed to fill the places of the non-commissioned officers granted furlough.

III.—That the men granted furlough proceed at the public expense to and from the port of embarkation in India, and that they receive free rations on board troopships, but pay their own way to their homes from Portsmouth and return journey to port of embarkation in England.

IV.—That the men will be paid under regimental arrangements in communication with the officer commanding the depôt, to whom they will have to report their arrival in England, and under whose orders they will assemble for re-embarkation for India. Cases of overstaying leave and sickness will be dealt with in accordance with the Queen's Regulations, section XIII., paragraphs 51 and 52 respectively.

V.—That in the case of a soldier who contracts marriage while on furlough, his wife will be allowed to accompany him to India provided the soldier is eligible, and a vacancy exists in the marriage roll.

VI.—That the number of men availing themselves of the concession shall be limited to 300 annually for the whole of India, to be increased as far as practicable after the first year's experience is gained.

VII.—That the men will not be allowed to take their families with them from India.

We understand that detailed arrangements for carrying out this measure are now under the consideration of the Commander-in-Chief in India, and will shortly be published in a General Order.

There was some good tilting at the ring by ladies at Simla, a prize of a gold bangle having been offered by a sporting Colonel on the Army Headquarter Staff. The conditions were :—For the greatest number of rings taken in three runs: horses to be ridden at full speed or rings taken not to count. There were six competitors, and Lady Victoria Blackwood won the prize, riding the black Walor mare Diplomat. The scores were Lady Victoria Blackwood, 4; Mrs. Rowan Hamilton, 3; Miss Ellis, 3; Miss C. Elles, 2; Lady Hermione Blackwood, 1; Miss Calender retired after the trial heat, owing to her pony being unsteady. It was a spirited contest throughout.

BIRTH CEREMONIES OF THE PRABHUS.

At the last meeting of the Bombay Anthropological Society, Dr. Kirtikar read a very interesting paper on the birth ceremonies observed among one section of the Hindoos:—

He began by observing that his remarks were confined to the Prabhu community of Bombay, to which he had the honour to belong. When it was apparent that the Hindoo lady was expecting her first baby, her "special" wishes or tastes were consulted, and she was treated with great tenderness. Nothing that would frighten her was allowed to approach her. The sight of a serpent or of a corpse was avoided; the news of a sudden and horrible death, or of a terrible accident, was studiously kept away from her. She was not permitted to be out of doors at dusk, lest the evil spirits hunting the peepul might do her harm. She was presented with flowers and sweetmeats. All the delicacies of the table, especially the various rich sweetmeats so numerous among the Hindoos, were specially prepared for her. About the fifth month, the muhurt ceremony was performed. It had no religious significance. It was a gathering of the lady relatives of the house. Sugar and flowers and new clothes were presented by the visitors. The lady concerned and the visitors were presented with sugar. The ceremonial was purely a social one. It clearly showed that Hindoo ladies had their own sphere of independent action, and that they were not the slaves foreigners painted them through sheer want of knowledge. In some families the Sohola ceremony was performed. It was a religious ceremony, in which Gunpati was invoked as the averter of evil and destroyer of all danger. Ganga and Varuna were also worshipped to ensure peace and plenty. Offerings of rice and ghee were made to the sacred fire. Supposing the confinement natural, Dr. Kirtikar said, after the birth of the baby, it was received in a bamboo tray, and honey was dropped into its mouth. The Putraven ceremony was performed by the father of the child on the first day, or reserved to the fifth day, when the Sashtipujan ceremony was due. The chief event of the Putravan ceremony was the preparation of the birth paper or horoscope, which was done by the caste astrologers. The family priest was also in attendance on the occasion. Friends, male and female, were invited and presented with sugar and cocoanuts. The Sashtipujan ceremony includes the worship of Jiwatee. Shasti or Sati was a goddess akin to the Roman Parcae, or Fates, who the Hindoos believed wrote the fortune of the new-born baby on its forehead on the fifth night after birth. Jiwatee was the protecting goddess, and acted as a counteracting agent to the mischievous propensities of Shasti, or Sati. On the twelfth day, the father's sister proceeded to the house of the new-born babe to exercise her right of naming the child. This Dr. Kirtikar mentioned as another illustration of the authority the Hindoo woman exercises in her household. The horoscope name was determined from the hour of the birth, the moment of birth rather, and from the grahas, or stars, by the astrologer, but the pet name was always given by the aunt. If this right was infringed, the aunt had a just right to complain. It was she who put the child into the cradle for the first time, for up to that time the child lay by the mother's side. This also was a ladies' ceremony strictly. About the twenty-first day the mother worshipped a pail of water, which was equivalent to worshipping the well, implying that from that time she was free to attend to the linen of the child herself, washing it herself, if necessary.

Mr. Sitaram Vashnu Sukhthanker rose to mention a few matters which he thought had either escaped Surgeon Kirtikar, or had been purposely omitted by him as being of small importance. In the first place, he called attention to certain matters connected with the treatment of the infant on its birth; and, secondly, to the reading of the Shanti Path and the Ram Raksha, every evening during the ten days of confinement. A small quantity of ash being pulverised, a finger mark of the same is applied to the head of the mother and to that of the child, and the rest being tied in a piece of rag, is placed near the head and under the bed of the lady. This reading of the Path consists in repeating the name of God, and is intended as a prayer for the welfare of the mother and the child. The last point which he would mention was the practice of placing a crowbar along the threshold of the room of confinement, as a check against the crossing of any evil spirit. This was owing, he believed, to a belief among Hindoos that evil spirits always kept themselves aloof from iron, and even nowadays pieces of horseshoe could be seen nailed to the bottom sills of doors of Native houses. The bar is kept in situ for ten days. On the eleventh day a preparation of milk, sugar and rice is prepared, and a small quantity of the same is placed near the spot where the umbilical chord is buried, and the rest is partaken of by the members of the family. On the same day, the lady worships the sun, as, owing to her being confined for the ten days in almost a dark room, she could not see the sun, and the first time that the sun appears to her after her confinement she considers it her duty to offer prayer and thanksgivings.

The sanction of Austria-Hungary, Germany, and Italy to the Anglo French Convention for the neutralisation of the Suez Canal is now assured. The attitude of Russia remains doubtful.

MR. MILLER, Private Secretary to Sir Alfred Lyall, takes three months' leave, and will, it is understood, make a tour through Persia.

FRAU WILHELMINE.*

A "continuation" is seldom successful; the freshness of the first attempt is lost, ideas become threadbare, life, vigour, and energy are on the wane. Dr. Stinde and his most charming Buchholz family are an exception to this rule; for, delightful as was the introduction of the Berlin sketches to an English audience, the second review of adventures was scarcely, if any, less piquant and full of fire than the original volume. But how can an author be brave and foolish enough to attempt a third series? Surely all the experience of the literary world is opposed to such rashness and inconsiderate action. But, undeterred by the danger and difficulty of the task which he undertook to perform, Dr. Stinde has given to the world a third generation of "Buchholzes," and what is the result? One word expresses everything—"failure." Of course, there are some enjoyable scenes; of course, there are some brilliant flashes of the earlier fire; of course, there are adventures and misadventures which create laughter and occasion mirth; but vigour has declined, the steps are tottering, and the hand trembles; old age and senility have left the mark, alas! only too visibly upon well-nigh every page. Judged by its own merits there is much merit in "Frau Wilhelmine," but criticised by the standard, which the success of Dr. Stinde's previous productions has set up, this last emanation from his fluent pen is likely to fall flat.

The reader must judge for himself. As for ourselves, too, if we have been severe in our remarks we gladly recognise that there is much merit in the present sketches. Who can refuse to render a tribute of praise to the happy idea of making a nurse who is employed to look after twins so proud and haughty that she expected a "double portion of butter and sandwiches for her lunch?" Who can refrain from a roar of laughter at the chapter which is devoted to marbles, wherein is told how one of the latter is missing, and the twins are supposed to be the culprits? How exquisitely ludicrous are the agonised attempts of the mother and grandmother to find which of the twain was the culprit; how it all ended satisfactorily to all concerned except the two twins, who were physicked and otherwise tortured for an imaginary evil.

We wish Dr. Stinde had not made us so critical, for then, perhaps, we should have enjoyed the charms of Frau Wilhelmine and her worthy husband, instead of allowing the memory to fall back upon the drolleries and oddities of the "Buchholz family." But, in spite of all we have written, we scarcely know any writer who could have produced a better or more attractive evening's amusement.

OTHER SUNS THAN OURS.†

These miscellaneous Essays are, it is almost needless to assert in every way worthy of the distinguished name which appears on the title-page. In all matters connected with astronomy Mr. Proctor stands as an author facile princeps. He has made the study of the stars peculiarly his own, and he possesses the art of imparting his knowledge in a style as void of technicalities as is consistent with the abstruse science of which he writes. The volume under review consists of a series of miscellaneous essays, some of which are extremely interesting, and all of which are, of course, instructive. Take an example at random. All of us are familiar with comets; we gaze on them in the heavens, with their long nebulous tales of fire; we wonder, we admire; but beyond a hazy notion that these meteors improve port, and are the authors of all the abnormal irregularities in this mundane sphere, how many people possess a single idea as to the origin of these heavenly casuals?" Then, again, as to the sun's spots. We take up the paper and we read, it may chance, that somebody has seen some spots on the great luminary of the spheres. What are they? whence do they appear? what is their cause? In a word, who and what are they? Echo answers, what? But Mr. Proctor, if he cannot state with certainty, can, at least, propound a new and scientific theory. Some, too, amongst us have at times heard of the proposal to have a universal meridian for the whole world. But who could sketch an outline of what the suggestion means, or indicate one in a hundred of the difficulties which beset the path of this intensely difficult problem? Again, Mr. Proctor has a deal to say on this subject, and says it well.

Towards the close of this book there are a few Essays quite unconnected with the stars—as, for instance, "Parents and children," touching upon the vexed question as to hereditary talents or otherwise; "Living death germs," explaining the causes and spread of diseases. Then follows an amusing article on the misused "h" in England, succeeded by a brace of Essays upon Whist.

There is enough here and to spare to satisfy the keenest cravings of the famished inquirer; plenty to digest, and plenty to afford mental nourishment. Mr. Proctor has many admirers, and the appearance of this valuaole series of essays is calculated to increase their number.

LINGUISTIC AND ORIENTAL ESSAYS.*

It needs no small degree of boldness to lay before the public a series of essays which, with a few solitary exceptions, are devoted entirely to the East. Who cares to read about a country which, so far as general interest is concerned, might as well belong to Norway or Sweden as to England? Surely there must be something wrong that there should be such a melancholy lack of sympathy between East and West. Why is it? The reason is not difficult to discover. To appreciate India involves a study of the country, its people, and, more or less, its languages. The subjects that crop up from hour to hour are not intelligible to the lounger whose notion of literature is confined to a monthly serial or a scarcely decent novel. Take, for example, the vexed and thorny question as to Hindu infant marriages. The general public, like the Levite of old, "pass by on the other side," because the merest elements of the matter are not grasped; hence all that appears in the Press is unintelligible jargon. Such being the case, Mr. Curt deserves the gratitude of society in undertaking the thankless task of enlightening public opinion in regard to Eastern topics, upon which few persons are more entitled to speak with authority. For years he served the State with credit, if not with distinction; his experience is wide, and his sympathies universal. He is not a "faddist." To him the Hindu, the Muslim, the Parsi, and the hillside heathen are viewed with friendly eyes. The hand of friendship is stretched forth towards all, not merely to a favoured few. Nor can it be overlooked, as giving Mr. Cust a title to a nation's gratitude, that he has as yet published the best exposé of that colossial sentimental sham, which found expression in the anti-opium agitation. A man who has done this good to the body politic should be treated with consideration.

There is an immense deal of intelligent information in Mr. Cust's book. We do not agree with some of his remarks, notably in so far as he supports that monstrous air-bubble, competition, which, senseless as it is in England, is absolutely pernicious in India; but he has much to say, and says it well. Particularly would we recommend blustering, swaggering "young India" to read and ponder over his remarks as to the condition of the country under the ægis of the British administration. People also—and they are not a few—who gloat in finding fault with the mote in the national eye rather than in transferring their attention to the beam in the eyes of other countries, might with advantage read these essays, and try therefrom to deduce a feeling of patriotism and a habit of loyalty.

AN INDIAN WIZARD.†

Can the spirits of the dead be rehabilitated in the bodies of the living? Common-sense says no. Mr. Lillie, in his "Indian Wizard," says yes. The difference of the two opinions is the key-note of criticism upon this strange and weird composition, which is so unreal in its scope, so unlike anything which has ever happened to any individual reader, that a sense of doubt hangs like a shroud as page after page of ideal fancies and preternatural occurrences crowd together in never-ending succession. Mr. Rider Haggard could scarce have contrived to pen a tale more replete with dreamy superstition and untrammelled inventiveness than this strange, yet clever story of the Indian Wizard.

Captain B. G. Humphrey, 1st Battalion Leicester Regiment, has been selected for the adjutancy of the 1st Volunteer Battalion, which becomes vacant on Jan. 15 next, on the completion of Captain F. W. Reader's term of service. Captain Reader served in the Afghan War in 1878-79, as orderly officer to Brigadier-General Cobbe, and was present at the storming of the Peiwar Kotal, being mentioned in despatches, and receiving the medal with clasp. Captain N. S. Allen, 2nd Battalion South Staffordshire Regiment, has been selected for the adjutancy of the 1st Volunteer Battalion, which becomes vacant by the retirement of Major H. R. Mitford, who has held the post since August, 1860. Captain Allen served with the 1st Battalion of the South Staffordshire Regiment in the Egyptian War of 1882. He also took part in the Nile Expedition of 1884-85. Major Mitford's twenty-seven years' service with the regiment has won him the esteem of the officers and men, both past and present.

IT is said that for a long time the Amir has been trying to get a footing in Buner, Swat, and Bajauar. His aim is to secure an authority over these countries by the aid of the priestly class. The different local chiefs are not likely to permit this. The Ghilzai revolt will now be left alone until next year, the Amir's troops holding on to Ghuzul, Kelat-i-Ghilzai, Mukkur, and other places on the Kabul-Candahar road. In the Jellalabad district the Sinwaris will not give in or come to terms with the Sipah-Salar, who is shortly expected to move from Deh-Bala in an eastward direction.

BEFORE the Punjab Government left Simla matters had been put in train for the settlement of the difficulty about the strength of the Chief Court Bench. It was recognised that the first duty of Government was to take steps for the immediate removal of the block in the business of the Court, and to give litigants a prospect of having their pending cases decided within a reasonable time. With this object two temporary Judges were appointed, and it was confidently expected that when the Court opened after the vacation, as it did on the 17th instant, it would have a strength of six judges. But a hitch appeart to have occurred somewhere, and our latest information is that the sanction of the Secretary of State has not yet been received, although all arrangements have been made in anticipation. It is to be trusted that the period of suspense will not be prolonged.

A NATIVE ON A NATIVE PAPER.—The Indian Nation says:—"With the modification of meaning which results from the use of the subjunctive mood and the interrogative form of sentence, the Amrita Bazar charges the British Government with meanness, oppression, and treachery in its dealings with Dhulip Singh. Dhulip Sigh has forfeited all claims to indulgent treatment, and we do not care to inquire into the details of his relations with the British Power. But surely the Government exhibits not meanness but magnanimity when it allows scandalous writing like that which the Amrita Bazar has indulged in to go unpunished. There are limits to freedom of speech. We can conceive no writing more outrageous than that which charges the Government by innuendo with 'oppression,' 'foolishness,' 'stupidity,' 'meanness,' 'treachery.' If India was governed by Bismarck we can guess what the fate of the writer would be."

FRACAS AT A BOMBAY THEATRE.—There appears to have been a lively scene at the Gaiety Theatre, Bombay, on the 25th ult. Four "inebriated sons of Mars," as a local paper describes them, misbehaved themselves in the building, and were remonstrated with outside by a muscular naval officer. The paper describing the scene which followed, says:—"This was the signal for a very sanguinary battle. One of the party had still some glimmering of reason, but the other three, who had cultivated a deeper acquaintance with the 'rosy god,' immediately set upon the officer, going for him viciously with clenched fists. The latter, however, was on the alert, and, planting his fist between the eyes of one of his assailants, caused him to see ten thousand lights, while he sent another of them sprawling across the road. By this time there had been a rush from the theatre, and as the rowdy young gentlemen attacked everybody in the most promiscuous manner there was an unpleasant scrimmage. Among the audience were a number of Jack tars, some of whom joined eagerly in the fray, though they found it somewhat difficult to distinguish friend frem foe. A good deal of blood was shed on both sides. The gallant officer who had given advice gratis unfortunately did not escape, and had his nose broken. One of his assailants, it appears, jumped on his back and pinned his arms behind him, while a cowardly blow was dealt him on the nose by another of the party. The four young bacchanalians did not escape till they had received a sound thrashing, and it is probable that some of them will not be able to appear in public for some time to come, and that sundry surgical operations will have to be performed on their noses and faces. A European constable was on duty in the theatre, but he was a picture of helplessness. When asked why he did not interfere more actively to prevent bloodshed, his only reply was that the combatants were officers, who presumably must not be 'run in.'"

GENERAL VALENTINE BAKER (Baker Pacha) died at Tel-el-Kebir on the 17th inst. of fever. The deceased officer was born in 1825, entered the British army in 1848, and served through the Kaffir war of 1852-53, and in the Chimea during the campaign of 1855. In 1860 he took command of the 10th Hussars, which he resigned in 1873 by reason of seniority. He left England and travelled through Persia and on the borders of Afghanistan in order to gain exact information as to the geographical disposition of the country between the Russian and British frontiers. On his return he published the result of his observations in a book entitled "Clouds in the East." At this time he was known as a brilliant cavalry officer with a considerable knowledge of army organisation. In 1874 he was appointed Assistant Quartermaster-General at Aldershot; but in the following year, in consequence of the issue of the trial the Queen v. Baker, he was dismissed from the service. In 1877 he began a new military career in the Turkish Empire. After the English successes in Egypt the organisation of the gendarmerie in that country was put under his control; and in 1884, on the defeat of Hicks Pacha, General Baker, known as Baker Pacha, made an attempt to relieve Tokar, but was defeated on Feb. 5, 1884. Repeated but unsuccessful attempts were made to secure his reinstatement in the British army.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THE ARMIES OF THE NATIVE STATES.

THE discussion as to the acceptance or refusal of the Nizam of Hyderabad's gift of money has led in India to the discussion of a more important question affecting the Native Princes of India and the Paramount Power. The Nizam having, besides the offer of a money gift, placed his sword at the disposal of the British Government, it is argued in certain quarters that the Native Princes should be invited to form a reserve army of some 180,000 picked men, to be drilled by European officers for the space of three years, at the expiration of which time it should be optional for each State to continue them in its employment or to send them back to their proper duties. The matter is one which is fraught with difficulties. As at present constituted, the armies of all the Native States, with the exception, perhaps, of that of Gwalior, are little better than a concourse of "men with muskets"—an armed rabble, in fact, who in case of an invasion of India would be of little value to our regular forces, whether as a support or as a reserve. Indeed, they might in such a case become a positive incumbrance—more troublesome to friends than to foes. It has been suggested that by weeding out all ineffectives and forming a select body of picked men a force of many thousand strong might be obtained who could be trusted to go with our own troops under fire, and share with them the dangers and honours of war. The suggestion of keeping the Native levies altogether as a reserve would not, it is said, find favour with the Princes and Chiefs who would be their leaders. On this point the Madras Mail says:—"The appropriate sphere of a reserve force is of course to supply garrisons, to keep open all roads of communication, and to form a second line of defence, but without necessarily coming under the enemy's fire. Such an arrangement would obviously be rather an insult than a compliment. The Nizam, we may be quite certain, would not send a man to the front if he were destined to remain in the rear, and mount guard over the sutlers and the baggage."

This is all very well, but then comes the delicate and also very difficult question, "Quis custodiet ipsos custodes," if we trust such levies to take their place in the fighting line? It may be a weakness to have any doubts now, but the story of the Mutiny, which told also of the utter collapse of our system of Contingents, can hardly be recalled without such doubts arising. The Nizam and every Native Prince may be as loyal as Scindhia was in those dark days, but, like Scindhia, they may not be certain of their own men. And it is not to be forgotten that the Contingent which gave us the most trouble was the Gwalior Contingent, which had been carefully trained and drilled by English officers. But this question of utilising the Native armies must be met sooner or later. If it be decided to organise a force from them which is to take its place with our own regulars such a force would have to be armed with similar arms of precision to those carried by our Sepoy soldiers, and they would have to be equally well officered, drilled, and disciplined. Ought the experiment to be tried, and if not what is to be done? This is the question which more than one writer in India is trying to solve, but upon which no two seem to be thoroughly agreed. The journal from which we have quoted as condemning the suggestion of a reserve does not approve of the idea of forming a picked force to march shoulder to shoulder with the Queen's army, because it says that the States whose troops had thus been favoured, feeling proud of the distinction, would quickly presume upon it, while their disappointed neighbours would recall their respective Contingents, and would cherish an abiding recollection of the affront passed upon them. The latter part of this objection is plausible enough, but we do not quite see the force of the former. We do not think that the States favoured would presume; we rather think that they would value the compliment paid to them, and rest content on their laurels. The Madras Mail does not, however, offer a plan of its own. It recommends accepting the Nizam's friendly overtures, and making a suitable return for them. "When that is done to the satisfaction of both parties it will be soon enough to take in hand the larger question of utilising the Native armies."

But this is begging the question, not solving it.

SIR ROPER LETHBRIDGE has, we understand, been invited to read a paper on the Gold Fields of Mysore at the Colonial Institute, and has consented to do so at an early meeting, when Sir Andrew Clarke, who was one of the first officials in India to call attention to those fields, will preside.

THE CENTRAL BORNEO COMPANY (LIMITED.)

The statutory general meeting of the Central Borneo Company (Limited) was held on the 15th inst. Mr. Arthur Dudgeon presided, in the absence of the chairman of the company, the Hon. Evelyn Ashley, owing to the death of a relative. The Chairman said that it was not customary for any report or statement of accounts to be submitted at statutory meetings. The directors had no resolutions to propose. An agreement with the company's prospector, Mr. Hay, was signed on Aug. 9, and he left London on Aug. 25 for Singapore, en route to Borneo. Since then intelligence had been received to the effect that he had reached Singapore and left the next day, per steamer, for Labuan and Brunei. Since the date of the formation of the company Mr. Alfred H. Everett had obtained on behalf of the company a concession from Rajah Brooke of the exclusive right to prospect for and work minerals in a tract of territory within the boundaries of Sarawak, lying to the west of Brunei, and known as the Baram river district. Antimony was known to exist there, and cinnabar was reported, but until the district is properly prospected it was impossible to say whether either or both exist in payable quantity. The mineral leases of the company, including the concession from the Rajah of Sarawak of the Baram river distri t, cover a total area of about 20,000 square miles. Of the existence of minerals in these territories there was little or no doubt, and any discovery of a deposit in payable quantity should render the company's concession of considerable value. The directors did not anticipate that any great progress would be made by the prospecting party during the wet season, which has just commenced, but the proprietors might rest assured that everything possible would be done, and in the event of any intelligence being received of interest to the proprietors it would be at once communicated to them by circular.

The prospectus has been issued of a company for acquiring and working the patents of the late Mr. D. C. Green, for ventilating by compressed air and forced draught. It is called the D. C. Green Compressed Air, Forced Draught, and Ventilating Company (Limited), and will have a capital of £75,000, divided into 15,000 shares of £5 each, payable £1 on application, £1 on allotment, and £3 two months after. The vendors receive £20,000 in cash and 5,000 fully paid-up shares, of which 2,000 will only receive interest when 10 per cent. has been paid on all other shares. Mr. Hiram S. Maxim will act as consulting engineer, in addition to having a seat on the board. It is stated that the principle of induced movement of air and other gases by means of the injection of air under pressure has been brought into practical use by means of the patents of the vendor company. Six of the ships belonging to the North German Lloyd's Steamship Company have been fitted after trials on the Oder and Neckar. The Orizaba and Oroya of the Orient Line are also fitted, while the P. and O. S. N. Company has adopted it. The bankers are the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation. The method the company has introduced is distinctly novel, and should be very applicable to many descriptions of buildings in the East.

Messrs. George White and Co. report that the China Tea Market during the past week has remained quiet, little having been done except at public sale, where 35,000 packages have been disposed of. In the absence of much disposition to purchase, prices for nearly all descriptions of Congou have ruled easier. Green Teas continue firm for fine grades, and Scented Teas have realised about last week's rates.

Messrs. Elliott, Lack, and Porter's China Tea market report says:—Without any marked change to advise, we notice a stronger tone for all classes of Congou over 8d. and a better disposition on the part of buyers to deal in these. The improvement in value of first crop Blacks is now being extended to Foochow sorts, and some business has passed at improved rates. Common Tea has again been offered in quantity, and values accordingly receded. Clean Red Leaf Tea was sold 4d. to 4½d., while in Blacks good Oanfa sold at 5½d. Shipping continues quiet. Black Leaf: At auction some 5,500 packages were offered, mostly of the lower grades, and sold in buyers' favour. Medium first Crop Teas 9d. to 11d. are in demand, and improved rates are obtainable, while finer sorts are so scarce that their values, although high, are almost nominal. Red Leaf: Siftings and broken leaf have brought 4d. to 4¾d.; common whole leaf is now very cheap, quotable at 4d. to 4½d., and the supply of all kinds under 7d. far exceeds the demand. The auctions of old season's Leaf Tea continue to depress rates, but we have no lower quotation than 4d. to chronicle. Sahyunes, Padraes, Suey Kuts and Yong Hows, under 8d., are quiet, and above this very little has passed, but values are maintained; a Padrae sold at 8¾d., and 11d. was refused for Yong How. In Panyongs some buying has been done, 8½d. to 10d. for second and third crops, while first crop leaf is firmly held for full prices, which buyers will probably have soon to pay. Seumoos 8d. to 10d., and fine Teas 1s. to 1s. 3d. are wanted. Souchongs continue cheap; excellent value has been done at 8½d. to 9½d. Paklins: Common Tea is comparatively dear, quotable at 6d. to 6½d.; better sorts maintain their position. Oolongs: The auction room has again been resorted to for the sale of Formosas. Privately some business has been done at late rates. We quote sales fair cargo 1s., good cargo 1s. 1d., fine to finest 1s. 4d. to 1s. 6d., choice 1s. 10d. to 2s. New Makes have been offered in moderate quantity, and sold steadily 6½d. to 10¾d., finer kinds meeting with good competition. Scented Teas maintain their position. Green Teas have sold in buyers' favour for medium grades, choice lines holding their own. Quotations:— N.S. Black Leaf, 5d. to 8½d.; O.S. ditto, 5d.; N.S. Red Leaf, 4d. to 9½d.; ditto Siftings, 4d. to 5½d.; O.S. ditto, 4d. to 6d.; Paklings, 6d. to 6½d.; Souchongs, 6¾d. to 9½d.; New Makes, 6½d. to 10¾d.; Scented Caper (Canton), 4½d. to 1s. 0½d.; Sc. O. Pekoe (Canton), 5½d. to 8¾d.; ditto (Foochow), 8¾d. to 9½d.; Oolong (Formosa), 1s. 0½d. to 1s. 5d.; Gunpowder, 8½d. to 2s. 5d.; Hyson, 4d. to 1s. 10¾d.; Young Hyson, 4d. to 1s. 6½d.; Imperial, 4d. to 11d.

The country demand for Indian Tea seems to have slackened somewhat, and buyers are consequently operating with caution, so whilst Teas of all grades with real merit in cup maintain their position, others, especially Pekoes and Bro. Pekoes, 11d. to 1s. 6d., show irregularity and weakness in rates. Finest kinds from all districts are in small supply. Assams: Quality generally unaltered. P. com. and ord. 8d. to 10d., good to fine, 10d. to 1s. 4d. S. and P. S., 6½d. to 7½d., good to fine, 8d. to 1s. 1½d. Cachars and Sylhets: The improvement in quality previously noticed is maintained. P. com. and ord., 7½d. to 9d., good to fine, 9½d. to 1s. 3½d.; S. and P.S., 6½d. to 7¾d., ditto, 8d. to 10d. Borokai Company's P., 1s. 4d.; B.P., 2s. 6d.; P.S., 1s.; B.P.S., 1s. 3d. Darjeelings and Terais: A plentiful supply of useful grades of the former which sell readily, the latter continue poor. P., common and ordinary, 9d. to 11d.; good and fine, 1s. to 1s. 7½d.; P.S., common and ordinary, 7½d. to 8½d.; good and fine, 9½d. to 1s. 1½d. Ceylons:

OFFICIAL REPORTS.

[SUMMARISED.]

EXTERNAL LAND TRADE OF THE PUNJAB.

The total foreign trade during the year (1886-87) shows an increase, both in weight and value, as compared with the previous four years. The maundage, 2,425,752, was in excess of all previous years of the decade. Of the total value of the trade of the province, viz., Rs. 2,24,64,151, the value of the exports was Rs. 1,26,84,857, and of the imports Rs. 97,79,294. The increase in both exports and imports was common to all the countries, except Ladakh and Chinese Thibet. The Cabul trade, especially the exports, exhibits a satisfactory increase; while the import trade in shawls from Cashmere has revived. The development of the export trade in both Indian and European cotton piece-goods on the north-west frontier was encouraging, and the falling off in the Ladakh trade in English piece-goods is ascribed to Russian influence. The export of foreign tea increased from Rs. 9,70,934 to Rs. 13,70,920, of which Cabul absorbed almost the whole. There was a slight falling off in the value, but not in the weight of the exports of Indian tea. A remarkable increase in the imports of fruit was noticeable, due to the occurrence of a favourable season in the fruit-producing countries.

POLICE ADMINISTRATION IN THE PUNJAB.

The total number of cognisable offences reported during the year (1886) was 72,915, against 68,502 and 62,510 for the two previous years. The statistics indicate a serious increase of crime in 1885, and again in the year under report; but it is pointed out that the system under which the statistics are prepared is not thoroughly reliable. Murders rose from 433 in 1885 to 453 in 1886, and attempts to murder from 81 to 109; while the number of serious cases of house trespass was 13,744, against 12,327 in 1885. Though population and reported crime have steadily increased the scale of the police establishment remains almost exactly as that sanctioned when the department was first organised, on the passing of Act V. of 1861. This seems to indicate that the establishment is insufficient for present needs. Under existing financial circumstances any useful addition to the provincial police force would be impracticable; but if an increase in serious crime can be definitely traced to certain localities it will, it is observed, be a matter for consideration whether it may not be advisable to strengthen the offending localities. The percentages of dismissals and resignations among the regular district police were lower and the departmental punishments fewer, while the number of rewards were considerably larger than in any of the four preceding years.

REGISTRATION DEPARTMENT, PUNJAB.

The statistics for the past year (1886) show that there was an increase in the number of documents registered in the ordinary mode, but the increase was entirely among deeds, the registration of which was compulsory by law. In the number of those in which recourse to registration is optional, there was a decided falling off, which is attributed to the working of the new rules for recording mutations of land in the revenue registers. The increase in the number of compulsory registrations was due to the depressed condition of the agricultural classes from failure of the harvest. The Lieutenant-Governor does not accept this explanation, and thinks "the subject is one deserving of attention." There was an improvement in the amount of inspection work performed by deputy commissioners. The Registration Report will not again be prepared in full until the year 1890. Statistical returns and brief commentaries in the shape of notes will alone be submitted in the intermediate years, 1888 and 1889.

STAMP DEPARTMENT, PUNJAB.

The revenue of the year 1886-87, Rs. 34,94,398, was the highest on record, and was better by Rs. 1,76,628 than the income of the preceding year. A large proportion of the increase was obtained under the head of non-judicial stamps, which amounted to Rs. 11,59,509, as against Rs. 10,70,113 in 1885 86. The only falling off in the year occurred in the sale of telegraph stamps, the income from which was only Rs. 2,43,494, as against Rs. 5,55,402 in 1885 86. The "Lieutenant-Governor does not, however, think it is any matter of congratulation that the stamp revenue should have been increased by more frequent sales of ordinary stamp paper, due to a depressed state of agriculture in districts where the spring harvest has been bad."

FOREIGN TRADE, N.W.P., AND OUDH.

The report for the year ending 31st March, 1887, shows that the total traffic which crossed the frontier of the united Provinces amounted to 46,10,438 maunds, against 42,36,795 maunds in the previous year. In the trade with Thibet there was a decrease in exports, which was mainly due to a falling off in the export of grain from both Kamu and Garthwal, but there was a slight increase in the imports under borax and wool; while the import of salt was the lowest on record since 1881-82. The total imports from Nepal during the year exceeded those of the previous twelve months by about four lakhs, both in weight and value. The exports fell off by a quarter lakh of maunds in weight, but increased by over three-quarters of a lakh of rupees in value. The excess in imports was made up chiefly of larger imports of wheat, spices, timber, and wood; the decrease in the weight of exports being due principally to diminished exports of salt.

DISPENSARIES AND CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS, N.W. PROVINCES AND OUDH.

There were 251 dispensaries at work on December 31, 1886, an increase of seven during the year. Of these 212 are classed as "Local Fund Dispensaries," 12 as "State-aided," 24 as "Private," and 2 as "State" dispensaries. In the 226 dispensaries for which statistics are given 2,109,478 persons received relief, against 1,936,352 in 1885. To these have to be added 71,960 persons treated by the Mission dispensaries, and 68,740 by the 13 excluded "Private" dispensaries, making a total of 2¼ million cases for a population of 44 millions. The year was not exceptionally unhealthy, though in the Meerut and Agra divisions there was a good deal of malarious fever, and skin diseases were very prevalent in certain districts. Of the total persons seeking relief 58 per cent. were men, 17·91 per cent. women, and 24·09 per cent. children. The percentage of the chief classes of disease to the total number of patients was—fever, 18·15; rheumatism, 4·39; opthalmia, 5·57; respiratory affections, 6·37; dysentery, 2·64; abscesses, &c., 4·22; skin diseases, 19·93; other local diseases 18·69, injuries 2·76. The available in-door accommodation was in most hospitals fully utilised, the daily average of house patients being generally higher than last year. Of surgical operations 15,237 major, and 98,330 minor, were performed, showing a slight falling off in the former. The receipts and expenditure of the year were somewhat in excess of the figures for 1885. Sir Alfred Lyall observes with much satisfaction the tribute of acknowledgment and praise which Dr. Walker, the Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals, places on record of the services of those medical officers who, during the last twenty-five years, have done so much to increase the efficiency and the popularity of the dispensaries under their charge. His Honour adds, however, that it is to Dr. Walker's unremitting supervision and administrative experience that the progress which the Inspector-General chronicles with such just satisfaction is largely due; and he "regrets that Dr. Walker's long connection with this important department is drawing to a close."

FRY'S
PURE CONCENTRATED
COCOA

Prepared by a new and special scientific process, securing extreme solubility, and developing the finest flavour of the Cocoa.

PURE—EASILY DIGESTED—ECONOMICAL

"I consider FRY'S PURE CONCENTRATED COCOA much better and more economical for the use of troops than the usual rations of coffee and tea that are now supplied. The strengthening qualities FRY'S COCOA possesses renders it a valuable adjunct to the list of medical comforts."

JAMES C. DICKINSON,
Retired Staff Surgeon.

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

'Th Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette' nas acquired a reputation for early and exclusive Intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGIATE SCHOOL.

THE course of instruction is designed to PREPARE BOYS (Sons of Gentlemen, from 7 years of age) to occupy the positions of Land Owners and Occupiers, Land Agents, Surveyors, intending Colonists, &c. The education secured at this institution is of a very superior character, the whole object of the School being to impart a thoroughly practical and scientific knowledge of all agricultural subjects; a thorough moral, intellectual, and physical training, it pledges itself to send forth its pupils practically religious and sound scholars. The school is most pleasantly situated in a healthy locality. The greatest possible care is bestowed upon the health and domestic comfort of the pupils. The diet is excellent and unlimited. The school is very strongly recommended. References throughout Great Britain.—Address for prospectus the PRINCIPAL, Maypole Road, East Grinstead, Sussex.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

HERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

TESTIMONIALS.

From R. NORMAN SHAW, Architect to the Royal Academy:—

29, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C.,
February 19 1884.

The "Æolus" Waterspray Company have fixed two Air Extractors and one Air Warmer in the Life School of the Royal Academy of Arts with, we all think, the happiest results. Our troubles with that school have always been very great, as owing to the amount of gas consumed, and the necessity of keeping the school well heated on account of the Nude Models, its tendency has been to get unbearably hot, and when windows were attempted to be opened the draughts were most dangerous. It is now kept at a pleasant even temperature, and there are no draughts. The reason for this is not difficult to find. The very hot air from the steam-pipes, and the fumes from the gas, ar carried off as fast as they are generated, and a continual stream of warm fresh air being supplied, the school is kept comfortable.

(Signed) R. NORMAN SHAW, R.A., Architect.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DYSENTERY.

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has neverbeen published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This caution is necessary, as many persons take the purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME of DIARRHŒA."

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

DIAMANTÉ BRILLIANTS.

The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS originally introduced into England by the SOLE AGENTS, Messrs. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established, and the success of their enterprise has surpassed their expectations. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS afford the only instance hitherto attained of the perfect representation of real Diamonds by artificial means. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real Diamonds of great value at the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grand monde and élite of society, and are now worn at the Court Balls and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly Diamond Ornaments, and can be worn at all times with confidence and security.

Every article is Mounted in 18-Carat Gold by the best Diamond Setters, exactly in the manner of the finest Brazilian Diamonds.

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Scenes from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

The Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 11th November; from Allahabad and Madras to the 9th November; and from Calcutta to the 8th November.

When the Overland Mail left India Lord and Lady Dufferin were at Kapurthala as guests of the Rajah. His Excellency was enjoying some excellent sport in the Rajah's shooting preserves, and Lady Dufferin was visiting the ladies in the palace, who thanked her for the work she is doing for the women of India, and subscribed Rs. 1,000 in honour of her visit.

Lord and Lady Reay will be the guests of the Viceroy at Calcutta during the cold season.

Mr. A. P. Macdonnell, Home Secretary, goes home on short leave by the mail of 13th January, and rejoins at Simla.

Sir Lepel Griffin has resumed charge of his duties as agent to the Governor-General for Central India, and Colonel P. W. Bannerman has retured to Gwalior, relieving Major Barr, who has held charge during the past six months of the duties of Resident, and now reverts to his appointment at Rewah. It is understood that Sir Lepel Griffin proposes shortly to visit Gwalior, and to remain there some weeks to ascertain how the administration of the State has been conducted by the Council of Regency under the presidency of Sir Gunpat Rao.

Sir A. L. Cappel, Director-General of the Telegraph, after leaving Simla, visits the Punjab, Quetta, Karachi, and Bombay officially. He goes home in March.

A conference of the Bishops in India and the Island of Ceylon is to be held in Calcutta on Jan. 16th next and following days. The Bishops of Madras, Bombay, Colombo, and Rangoon are expected to be present.

On the departure of Sir Alfred Lyall Mr. Miller, his private secretary, takes three months' language leave and three months' privilege leave, which he will spend in Persia Major Sir George Larpent, aide-de-camp, rejoined his regiment, the Connaught Rangers, at Jullunder, and will probably be most of the cold weather in command of the detachment at Dugshai.

The Governor-General in Council, in a despatch to the Government of Madras, has especially recognised the services of the Lower Burma garrison, in the course of the campaign in that province, and more particularly those troops that were stationed near the old frontier.

The rewards to the commanders in the Burma campaign will not come in the usual form of "donation batta," but as "gratuity." The sums that have been sanctioned on this account are, it is stated, as follows:—To the Commander-in-Chief, Sir Frederick Roberts, Rs. 19,000; to Sir Charles Arbuthnot and to the estate of the late Sir Herbert Macpherson, Rs. 9,576 each; and to Major-General Sir G. White, Rs. 6,688.

Information has been received in Calcutta of a raid in North Lakhimpore, Assam, by Abors. One hundred Abors raided a Duffla village within a stone's throw of the Harmutty tea factory on the night of the 29th October. They carried off eleven persons and all the movables. A female who escaped reports that the male prisoners were hacked to pieces on the way back. She brought a hand pierced with arrows as a proof of her assertion. The raid is believed to have been instigated by the Dufflas living on the plains. The Assistant Commissioner of Lakhimpore is waiting for reinforcements and permission to follow the raiders and punish them promptly, but no men are available locally. Further raids are threatened.

On Sunday morning, November 6th, at an early hour, the Secretariat of the North-West Provinces was partially destroyed by a disastrous fire, which occurred in the northern block. There has been an immense loss of records of various descriptions, including those relating to the Mutiny; and the portion of the building in which the occurrence took place is so injured that it is believed it will be necessary to pull down the whole block and rebuild it.

An allotment of twenty-three lakhs has been made in the Public Works Department budget for expenditure in the Madras Presidency on Civil Works in 1888-89.

The draft of a bill to provide for the inspection and licensing of places of public resort and entertainment has been prepared, and has been submitted to the Law officers, Madras, for an expression of opinion on its provision.

The blockade imposed upon the Bozdars on the Frontier has been withdrawn.

Government have approved of the proposed settlement of the Bashahr State; and the Superintendent of Hill States has been requested for this purpose to give the Tikka Sahib every assistance. The services also of Arjan Das, of the Hissar District, have been placed at the disposal of the State.

Mr. F. B. Peacock succeeds to the substantive vacancy on the Bengal Board of Revenue created by Mr. Horace Cockerell's retirement. Mr. Peacock is understood to intend taking leave from the beginning of next hot weather.

The police have succeeded in arresting three men, who were ende avouring to escape into British territory, after murdering a man with whom they had a dispute about a goat at Cimcolim.

His Excellency the Governor of Madras has issued stringent orders that, in future, medical reports on cases of officers proceed ing on sick leave under the Civil Leave Code, shall invariably be sent in sealed covers for transmission to the India Office or for other purposes.

The work of construction of the Bezwada line is being pushed on so vigorously by Mr. Furnivall, the engineer in charge, that it is expected that a section of the main line from Warungal to Dornakal towards Bezwada, as also a mineral branch to the Singarani coal fields, will be opened for public traffic at the commencement of next year; the whole length being a distance of about seventy miles.

The news from Afghanistan during the past week has been very meagre.

Servants of the Ameer at Deb Bele are reported to be daily deserting with their arms, and joining the revolted Shinwaris. The latter are continually plundering villages in the Ameer's territory.

Umra Khan, of Jandal, has been shut up in a fort by a large force under Safdar Khan, of Nawagi.

The Russians are making arrangements at Kaki for bridging the Oxus.

Nawab Inyat Ali Khan, of Malair Kotla, has offered pecuniary assistance to Government for frontier defences.

A local paper, in writing of Ayub Khan's surrender, says:—We believe that Sirdar Hashim Khan, son of Mahomed Sharif Khan, was mainly instrumental in bringing it about. Hashim was one of the Afghan Sirdars who did good service after Sir Frederick Roberts's capture of Kabul, and cherished for a time the hope of being made Amir. He fled to the Kandahar province on Abdur Rahman's claims being acknowledged by the British Government, and joined Ayub at Mazra, being present at the action of Sept. 1st, 1878. Since that time he has lived in Persia, chiefly at Mashad, and about a fortnight ago Ayub opened communications with him there. Hashim made these known to the Political Agent, General Maclean, and the result has been the surrender of the fugitive, Ayub's great desire was to obtain a safe conduct from General Maclean, and this he no doubt would have been granted in some form or other.

THE revision of the boundary between Sind and the Punjab has been under the consideration of Government lately.

MR. MAUGHAN, the Mining Engineer, who has for many years acted as Agent and Manager to the Colleries at Mophani, in the Central Provinces, has been appointed by the Local Administration to the management of the Government mining operations at Warrora and Umaria.

FEMALE medical Education in Madras is making great progress.

THE MAHARAJAH OF MYSORE proceeds on tour to Bombay, Benares, and Calcutta shortly. The Maharajah goes to Calcutta to pay his return visit to the Viceroy, and it is believed there is some political object in his visit.

IN consequence of the recent scarcity remissions of revenue, aggregating nearly Rs. 9,000, will be made to certain villages in Lahore district.

THE Annual Report of the Government Telegraph Department shows good progress all along the line.

THE revised estimate of the Indian Tea Crop for 1887 is 86,135,859 lbs.

ABOUT 82½ million lbs. will be available for shipment to Great Britain against 75¾ million lbs. shipped during the season of 1886-87.

MR. D. FITZPATRICK took over the Chief Commissionership of Assam from Mr. Ward on the 31st of October.

DURING the past week the new P. and O. Company's steamer Victoria has been visited by thousands of people in the Bombay Harbour.

THERE were 118,368 deaths from cholera in Bengal last year.

SOME remarkable stories occasionally find their way into India from Afghanistan. Here is one of them. The friends of Nur Mahomed state that the present General of the Jelalabad force sent twenty assassins to kill Nur Mahomed Khan, son of Wali Mahomed Khan. Nur Mahomed was fortunately absent on the night that they went to his house frr the purpose, and another man was sleeping on his bed, whose head the assassins cut off and took to the general, who, when he saw it found at once that it was another man's head.

A CORRESPONDENT of Indian Engineering tells a story which illustrates in a very curious way the efficiency of the Indian Office, which itself costs about a quarter of a million sterling a year, in making the Indian taxpayers pay more for what the public service requires than is necessary. A bridge, it seems, had to be built over an anicut at Srivaikantham, and the question to be determined, if we understand the correspondent's story, which is not very clearly told, was whether the iron work should be done departmentally or by private enterprise. It was found that the mere making of the iron at the Government workshops at Madras would be Rs. 260 a ton, and that there was no skilled agency departmentally available for putting up the bridge when it was made. Messrs. Richardson and Cruddas, of Bombay, were therefore asked to tender for the work, and they offered to supply the bridge at a cost of Rs. 250 a ton, iron work, transport, and building it in situ included. But when the Madras Government asked to be allowed to enter into the contract the reply was that the Government of India could not sanction such a proceeding, as it would be in violation of the Secretary of State's express orders. The iron work, consequently, is being obtained through the Secretary of State, whether for the purpose of justifying the appointment of an Inspector-General of Stores in the great institution in St. James's Park, which costs India over £240,000 a-year, or whether to show that the Secretary of State's orders are of infinitely more importance than buying of goods in a cheap market, no one seems to know.

NOTES.

ACCORDING to Reuter's telegram Lord Dufferin held a public durbar at Peshawur yesterday, which was attended by a brilliant assembly, including Sir Frederick Roberts, Commander-in-Chief, and the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. Upwards of 300 representatives of the trans-frontier tribes were present.

THE Viceroy, addressing the assemblage, said that he rejoiced to have found everywhere during his tour on the frontier signs of material prosperity as well as proofs of the friendly relations existing with the frontier tribes, and with the ruler and people of Afghanistan. His Excellency hoped that the same state of things might continue for many generations.

Replying subsequently to an address of the municipal authorities of Peshawur the Earl of Dufferin said that he was glad to note signs of prosperity on the whole frontier. The excellent understanding established with Afghanistan would increase the security of the frontier towns, and the recent conclusion of the convention with Russia, which was inaugurated by his illustrious predecessor, for fixing permanently the boundary between Afghanistan and the dominions of the Czar, could not fail to tend towards the same end.

THE Burma Gazette is at last out. Colonels Cunliffe Low and Lockhart are made K.C.B.'s. Sir George White becomes a major-general on the permanent list for distinguished services in the field, a number of colonels get the C.B., and the "Distinguished Service Order" has been widely distributed. A number of brevet promotions follow, Lord William Beresford, military secretary to the Viceroy, and Major Monteith Hamilton, A.D.C. to Sir Frederick Roberts, becoming lieutenant-colonels.

ANOTHER Punjab prince has followed the example of the Rajah of Kuperthala. The Rajah of Nabha has offered four lakhs of rupees towards the frontier defence. A military contemporary thinks that it would be far better if the princes of India, instead of giving money for this purpose, would agree to embody their forces in the roll of the Imperial army and consent to have them organised on our plan, and trained with the assistance of English officers. This is the question which Lord Dufferin is possibly considering in connection with the offers of assistance made by the Nizam and others, but it is a question so fenced about with difficulties that it is not easy of solution.

OUR military contemporary says: "That the Indian Rajahs and semi-independent potentates of the Tributary States would be only too glad to organise their military forces as part and portion of the Queen's Eastern Army we are firmly convinced; and were Royal commissions to this effect given to these princes and their nobles loyalty and pride would be gratified and rewarded, while India would possess an additional fighting force of splendid quality—no longer a possible menace, but a strength to our Empire."

This is all very well, and possibly might turn out to be the truth if the experiment were tried in case of any danger threatening that Empire. But Indian Financiers would like to look forward to a time when the military expenditure might be decreased. It we could get rid of the Russian scare and make certain of the loyalty of all the Princes, Chiefs, and peoples of India, the reduction so much longed for might be made. To raise a large force from the Feudatory States might be good policy in time of war—but what is to be done with it in piping times of peace? Soldiers have to be paid and fed, and an auxiliary army for which there was no need would not be a boon or blessing to the Indian taxpayer.

IN noticing the Burma Gazette the same contemporary expresses surprise, which will be shared by many, that the name of Colonel W. Carey, R.A., has been omitted from the list of honours. Colonel Carey's services in Burma have been of an exceptional nature, and are well-known to the authorities. It is possible, however, that these services will be recognised in perhaps a more marked manner than by a brevet promotion.

THE controversy which has been waging lately in the columns of the Times as to the relative triumphs of Christianity and Mahomedanism in India appears to have extended beyond the church militant to the regular military ranks. A major-general has hazarded a statement to the effect that British officers in India avoid engaging those Native servants who are Christians, and that during his prolonged service in that country he had never known but one case where a Native who had embraced the tenets of Christianity was employed by an officer as a servant.

THIS somewhat sweeping assertion has brought down upon the Major-General the equally strong assertion of Dr. Trevor, formerly Chaplain at Bangalore, who declares that he had a congregation of 300 Native Christians, all of them servants; and he tells the following anecdote:—"A staff officer once asked me where I kept my Native Christians, as he never fell in with them. I replied that there was one standing behind his chair." The daily paper which gives this story adds editorially that "it cannot for a moment be doubted that the Native who has had perception enough to appreciate the light of Christianity makes a more intelligent servant than he who follows in the darkness of his forefathers."

We wonder if the editor gained this experience in India?

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

PROSPECTS OF INDIAN INDIGO.

(Pioneer.)

Whatever indirect benefits the Indian and Colonial Exhibition at South Kensington may have conferred on India, its direct effect on the prospects of Indian indigo is likely to be anything but favourable. If a correspondent of the Times can be believed, experts have long known that the indigo plant as grown in Sierra Leone and other British possesions on the West African Coast, is superior to the Indian plant in dyeing properties, and this fact was brought into prominent notice at the Exhibition. Dr. Watt, who ought to be a competent judge, is said to have acknowledged this superiority to Sir James Marshall, who represented the West African Colonies at the Exhibition, and Mr. Alfred Malony, in his "Forestry of West Africa," has directed attention to the possibility of developing the manufacture of indigo into a profitable trade. This has now come to the ears of the Liverpool traders, who have an exclusive monoply of the trade with West Africa, and they are said to be combining to establish indigo factories in that region. It is not long since we had to notice a statement that Tonquin was able to produce indigo of a better colour than Bengal; but the news of the Times' correspondent is much more serious. The great bulk of Bengal indigo goes to the United Kingdom, the United States and France; and if the dye could be manufactured in Western Africa under equal conditions as regards quality, fertility of soil and cheapness of labour, the diminution in the time and cost of transit would obviously be a serious handicap to the Indian product. Tirhoot indigo probably does not travel from the factory to the London market under six weeks or two months; but it could be carried from Sierra Leone to Liverpool in 14 days. This is not all, however. The plant in India requires careful and laborious cultivation, whereas in West Africa it is said to grow in wild profusion, and to afford a better dye; while such labour as is required is cheaper in Africa than in India. If these are facts, which there seems no good reason to doubt, the outlook for Indian planters is by no means pleasing. Dr. Watt is reported to have advised the Indian Government to import the West African plant for cultivatton in India: but even should this attempt be made and prove successful, there are other circumstances mentioned above which threaten that the West African factories would prove dangerous rivals of those in Bengal. It is well, at any rate, that the attention of those most directly interested should be called to the matter. We may note that the exports of Indian indigo during 1886 87 were valued at 369 lakhs of rupees, a sufficient indication of the magnitude and importance of the interests involved.

INDIAN WHEAT TRADE.

(Times of India.)

The development of the Indian wheat trade in recent years has been a source of gratification to all interested in the commerce and material prosperity of this country; and the importance which it has now assumed is shown in the fact that the American trade in this commodity has been so seriously affected by the rivalry of the produce of the Indian ryot that the Americans are talking of the advisability of granting bounties on the export of the cereal in order to counteract it. That this measure would seriously affect the welfare of the Indian farmer there is little reason to doubt. The present temporary dulness in our wheat exports is ascribed, and rightly we think, to the lowering of the prices on the American article, consequent on the recent failure of the Chicago and other "rings" to carry on their operations. Whether England is so wedded to its policy of purchasing in the cheapest market as to refuse to take any steps towards retaliation, as the Americans seem to think, is a point which is being discussed in the home papers, and it is asserted that the financial stability of India is a matter in which England is so deeply concerned that it could not look on quietly at the adoption of a system which would seriously interfere with the solvency of the Indian Exchequer. Instead of resorting to an import duty on this important article of food, the suggestion has been that for every shilling of bounty granted by the States the English Government should grant an equivalent import bounty on all Indian and Colonial wheat. By this means it is urged the English people would get their bread as cheap as heretofore, while the American people would pay a part of the cost of production, and by this means "Greater Britain" would compete on more favourable terms than ever.

FREE TRADE IN BURMA.

(Rangoon Times.)

In continuation of what we recently wrote on the policy of forcing India to abolish its import customs duties, let any of our readers look at an average shipment by an up-country steamer. He will find there goods from all European countries, England included. Silks, cottons, and woollens from England, France, Italy, Germany, Belgium, Holland; iron from Belgium, matches from Sweden, petroleum from Russia, butter from Denmark, kerosine oil and oilman's stores from America. Many years ago nearly all these goods came from England, giving employment to English operatives and English ships, now the trade benefits foreign operatives, and an increasing number of foreign ships and steamers. Many of the cases have never been touched by a British subject, either on land or water, uutil they arrive in Rangoon. Neither the British Government or a British subject has made one single rupee on one of them, for no duty is raised, and they were made by foreigners, brought here in foreign vessels to be sold at a profit to British subjects out here. Not only have foreigners benefited by the manufacture, but British manufacturers and their workmen have been, by the industry of foreign workmen, and the competition of free trade, ousted from what, as we said a few years ago, was almost an English monopoly. This seems to us not a policy which recommends itself to India and Burma. If England directly benefited by its great dependency only taking English goods, we could understand, when high duties shut English merchants out from many of the markets of the world, an English policy of forcing us to abandon import duties. But when the very countries which thus shut out our manufactures from their markets by heavy duties are allowed to send their goods here free to compete with English goods, and we are put to great stress for ways and means of levying the necessary Government revenue, a free trade policy, such as we have been forced to adopt against our own better judgment, would seem to be a suicidal one for India, Burma, and England. The abolition took place under a Conservative Government, if we remember right, when Lord Lytton was Viceroy. It shows that as regards their Indian policy there is but little to choose between Conservatives or Liberals. Although in their foreign policy the Conservatives act more in accordance with the spirit of Englishmen, and the traditions which have made us rulers of so vast a portion of the habitable globe, in domestic matters such as the abolition of the import duties, both parties are equally at fault in neglecting the real interests of India, and in desiring a policy which benefits English manufacturers and the manufacturers of the whole world at the cost of the poorest subjects of the British Empire, ruining thereby many small Indian industries which, under a wiser Government, would be fostered and encouraged, and raise a class who would have the deepest interest in upholding British rule, which thus protected them and prevented the ruin of their little manufactures, to uphold the fine theories of free trade, which they do not comprehend, and certainly have never desired.

THE CEYLON GOVERNMENT AND THE TEA FUND.

(Times of Ceylon.)

Government have promised to give Rs. 2,000 towards the proper representation of Ceylon tea at the Glasgow Exhibition. This offer was made before any proposal to support the Melbourne Exhibition had assumed practical proportions, and, of course, before those proposals had developed into their present comprehensive shape. Now that the planting community have shown such unmistakable energy in helping themselves, the Government should not be backward in supporting the movement, and this can best be done by means of an annual grant of not less than Rs. 10,000. We feel sure that the Government have only to be properly approached on this subject to take up the matter with zeal, and we know of no one who can place it more forcibly before them than the Planting Member of Council. To enumerate the benefits which the tea enterprise has conferred, is conferring, and will confer on the general prosperity of the colony or in regard to its finances would be absurd. They are all too well recognised to need mentioning; and in subsidising a fund such as Mr. Rutherford's for the maintenance of that industry in its present prosperous condition, the Government would not only be doing what is right, but also be acting very wisely in their own interests. If the Government of this colony is really actuated by a desire to do everything it legitimately can to promote the best interests of all sections of the community alike, and especially of the planting community, the present one is an excellent opportunity to display that feeling in a practical form. Planters have been ever ready to help themselves; they have lacked neither energy nor enterprise in pushing their own fortunes or in snatching victory out of defeat. They have never called on the Government to help them in their adversity, or relied on that help to assist them in their trouble. Nothing, therefore, could be more graceful, and nothing would tend more to minimise the active opposition to the Government so often displaced by the community at large, than a substantial grant by the Government to the Tea Fund annually. Such help at this time would be invaluable. It would show planters that the Government was really anxious to promote the success of their enterprise, and took an active part in so doing.

INDIAN TEA IN CHINA.

(Pioneer.)

We notice in a recent issue of a North China paper an advertisement stating that a Tientsin firm has just received a consignment of Indian tea. It is remarkable enough that Indian merchants should seek a market for their goods in the very region where, one would fancy, they were least likely to find it; but the fact becomes still more remarkable when we consider that large markets exist at their very door which they have as yet scarcely tapped. Last year, for instance, the imports of tea into India amounted to nearly 4¼ million pounds, much the highest point yet attained. Of this the great bulk came from China, but there were considerable shipments also from Ceylon and Java, and for the first time on record there was a consignment of 6,800 pounds from Batoum of all places in the world. Nearly all these imports are re-exported either by sea up the Persian Gulf, the tea being distributed through Persia and Central Asia, or by land across the frontier to Kabul. While only 200,000 pounds of Indian tea found their way to Persia last year, nearly 1¾ million pounds of foreign tea went to the same country by way of Bombay. A writer in the North China Herald in April last said the reason why Indian planters left this large and increasing trade to foreigners, was that the imports from China consisted for the most part of green tea of the hyson kind which has hitherto not been produced at all in India; but this statement requires verification, and does not at any rate apply to the teas of Java and Ceylon. How the Batoum consignment was ever directed to India is a still greater puzzle.

SUGAR PRODUCTION IN INDIA.

(Indian Spectator.)

The production of a good Indian commercial sugar from any one of the many sugar-producing plants, besides the generally-known sugarcane, is beset with difficulties, especially the one of suitable locality, as in the case of the date-palm, in which to grow it before it can be introduced into a sugar factory. The date-palm is a fair sugar producer; but prior to bringing it into general use, it must battle against "a strong local prejudice." The sugar cane, which is commonly used in the making of gur or "jaggree" is, strange to say, not extensively cultivated; for British India the approximate area is 80,378 acres and in Native States, 53,000 acres. There are four well-known varieties of the sugarcane, viz., the large white and the large red, the striped and the straw cane, and all possess much about the same saccharine qualities; but the large white, with sufficient irrigation, gives the largest outturn on the whole. The large red is sweeter than the white, and is largely consumed by the populace. Sugarcane plantations require, in the early days of growth, much care and constant attention and watering during the period of growth. "Trashing," as it is called, or the removal of dead leaves from the young cane, is injurious, and has been found productive of harm. The sorghum saccharatum has not yet proved its reputation as an efficient sugar producer. The sugar refineries, in Poona and Baroda, have apparently affected the old traditional wooden mills for grinding the cane. It is, however, an open question, whether it is due to this circumstance or to an appreciation on the part of the Native miller of a better apparatus that the iron mill, particularly in the Deccan, has succeeded in taking the lead; it saves time and labour, and extracts a larger percentage of juice.

THE LATE LADY BRASSEY.

We (Bombay Gazette) have received a letter from a correspondent on board the Sunbeam, giving an account of the death of Lady Brassey. Writing on Sept. 22nd, a few days before arriving at Mauritius, our correspondent says:—

"The death of Lady Brassey has made everyone on board sad and miserable, and we all feel it as a personal bereavement. To any one not belonging to the family it could not have failed to be apparent that the end was approaching, though, strange to say, neither she nor Lord Brassey, nor any member of the family, appeared to be sensible of the fact that she was a doomed woman until within a day or two of the crisis. Her indomitable energy and unceasing activity had deceived them, for up to three days of her death she busied herself with her work, and although confined to bed took a lively interest in all that was going on. It had been arranged that the crew were to give us a Nigger Minstrel entertainment, and that we were to give them in return a theatrical performance. The piece we had selected was Ice on parle Francais, and we were actively rehearsing this when Lady Brassey was actually dying, although, of course, no one knew it; indeed, she herself busily superintended the arrangements from what turned out to be her death-bed. The last time she did any active work was on Sunday, the 11th inst., when she entered up her diary, which was two or three days in arrears. She was then in very buoyant spirits, and we were hoping that a change for the better had taken place in her health. The improvement, however, was but a temporary flicker.

"The next morning I visited her in the deck-house, on the floor of which a bed had been made for her, and where she was chatting with her son and daughter. As I entered, she extended her hand and shook mine most warmly, with a kindly look on her face which I shall never forget. Her hand-shake was always thoroughly cordial, but on this occasion there was more than ordinary warmth in the greeting. The yacht was then rolling a good deal, but she said she did not feel the motion, and that she thought that her health was a little better.

"The next morning (Tuesday, Sept. 13) she was dangerously ill and at times unconscious. It was not expected then that she would live long, and in the afternoon all her family took final leave of her. Afterwards Lord Brassey came to me on the deck, and with much emotion told me that they had all wished her "good-bye." The poor lady lingered through the night, but died at eleven o'clock on the following morning (Wednesday, September 14). She was buried the same evening at sunset, the doctor reading the service and Lord Brassey delivering a brief address. I don't think I ever saw such an impressive and touching sight. It is over a week since she died, but the gloom caused by the occurrence is still far from being dissipated.

"The sad event occurred exactly a week after leaving Port Darwin, and while we were on our way to Mauritius, which we expect to reach in about a week from now. The idea of the family going from the Cape in a Union Company's steamer has been abandoned. We are making a quick passage across the Indian Ocean. Yesterday's run was 277 miles, and several days previously it was nearly as much. We expect to reach Mauritius on the 28th September."

THE RULES OF RACING IN INDIA.

(Times of India.)

The preliminary proposals for revision of the rules of racing in India, which have been drawn up and circulated by a Committee of the Calcutta Turf Club appointed for the purpose, will be carefully studied by everyone interested in turf matters. The principle will be generally conceded that it is to the true interests of the turf in India to have, as in England, one ruling body vested with absolute authority over all race meetings in the country. Nor can any serious objection be taken to the proposal that the Calcutta Turf Club should constitute this ruling body. It is the most largely recognised authority on Indian turf matters, and any scheme for the inclusion of representatives from other parts of India would be sure to prove unworkable. A ruling body constituted on the plan of the English Jockey Club would doubtless be preferable on many grounds, but it is clearly unattainable in India, where greater distances preclude race meetings from being a regular round for those devoted to the Turf. Altogether, therefore, it is a fair proposal, though it is pretty sure to excite a good deal of local prejudice in other parts of India, that the Calcutta Turf Club should be vested with supreme authority over Indian racing matters. If this be carried out, the rules drafted by the Committee will be applied to all race meetings in India, including Burma, and we shall have something like a simple and uniform system. It is further proposed that an official Racing Calendar shall be published, this to be the recognised organ for the publication of all matters relating to race meetings, racing edicts, racing notifications, &c., as is the Racing Calendar in England. Provision will also be made for the publication of a Forfeit List, and a list of declared defaulters for lotteries and bets. All appeals will be decided by the supreme authority, trainers and jockeys will hold their licences from it, and will define the powers and duties of stewards of race meetings. Gymkhana meetings will not be subject to the new rules, but all other meetings in India will be conducted in accordance with them. Several important minor proposals are put forward, such as that the maiden qualification of horses will be reduced from a win of Rs. 200 to a win of Rs. 100, that no prize of less than Rs. 100 shall be run for (except at Gymkhana meetings), that the recognised height of ponies shall be raised to 14 hands (races, however, may be restricted to any height under this by the introduction of a specific condition to that effect into the terms of the race, that assumed names will have to be registered annually, and that horses bearing the same name will have to be distinguished by numerals. One important point is the suggestion that no plea of declaration shall entitle an owner having two horses in a race to prevent one of them from winning in order to win with the other. In England, this privilege is allowed to owners, and there have been cases where the really better horse has been openly and, under English rules, legitimately "pulled" to make way for his more heavily backed stable companion. In Australia, however, there is an express turf law prohibiting this practice, and the Calcutta Committee "are convinced by experience that they are acting rightly in following the same course in India." There will be full opportunity for this and other matters of detail being duly weighed by turf experts all over India before the proposed rules becomes final. Meanwhile, the committee very fairly appeal that their proposals should be "considered and criticised from the broad standpoint of public turf interest, and not from the narrow platform of any chance wants of a special locality." A uniform code of turf rules for all India is an undoubted desideratum, and here we certainly appear to have the draft of a feasible scheme.

Digitized by Google

BENGAL.

An unfortunate old Native woman committed suicide the other day by lying down in front of a North-Western train. The Bengali official whose duty it was to report the accident sent in this grimly suggestive telegram to Lahore: "Native woman found small pieces in about seventy feet length's and the head was separated."

Syed Abdussobhan Chowdry, Zemindar and Municipal Commissioner of Bogra, has placed with the Municipality Rs. 150, and free quarters, for the services of a trained midwife till her permanent entertainment by the Municipality from the next official year. The public are extremely grateful to this public spirited zemindar, and to her Excellency Lady Dufferin for her sympathetic interest in the women of this country, which has evoked such public spirit. The Surgeon-General has been asked to recommend a good midwife.

Mr. C. J. O'Donnell, Officiating Deputy Commissioner of Julpaiguri, has been appointed on special duty to the Bengal Secretariat. He has to join the Secretariat on Nov. 15, and during the next few months will be employed in rewriting Sir William Hunter's Statistical Account of Bengal. This appointment, we believe, is the first step to a higher post in the Secretariat. Mr. O'Donnell was, it will be remembered, a great help in writing the "Statistical Reporter" originally, and he has been selected now on Sir William's recommendation to revise it.

The petition of the unsuccessful candidates at the last pleaders' examination for the Upper Subordinate Grade from the Benares District, praying that the results of the examination be reconsidered with reference to the action of the Examination Board in raising the minimum number of marks required for qualifying, has been rejected by a full bench of the High Court, on the ground that the Court having delegated its powers in reference to examination matters to the Board of Examiners, could not interfere. Mr. Justice Straight expressed no opinion one way or the other, as he was President of the Examination Board.

MADRAS.

The Madras Harbour Trust Board, in reply to a protest made by the Madras railway authorities against the very high rate of godown rent charged by the Board on all heavy machinery, rails, &c., not removed from the inner end of the pier within three days after the clearance of the vessel by which they were imported, have intimated that the demurrage rates, after much discussion, were fixed at what they are at present, so that they may be sufficiently deterrent to induce consigners to remove their goods sharp; that similar objections were raised by the port storekeeper, State railways; and that the facilities of cranes and sidings now offered should remove all difficulty towards removing cargo within the time fixed.

BOMBAY.

The Deccan Times hears that his Highness the Nizam is about to issue orders placing the Sarf-i-khas Department in Colonel Marshall's charge, under whom Abdul Russak, the Secretary, will work in future.

The Municipal Commissioners of Panwell are about to undertake a scheme for bringing water into the town, and with that object in view they have applied to Government for permission to raise a loan of Rs. 10,000 by the issue of twenty debentures of Rs. 500 each, for which interest will be paid at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum.

On Tuesday afternoon the Bombay Cotton Trade Association held a general meeting under the presidency of Mr. R. L. Stewart, when, among other business transacted, the principal of Mr. G. W. Moir's scheme for the institution of a clearing house for future delivery contracts was approved, and the details were referred to a sub-committee of the Association for report within a month.

Lieut.-Colonel W. A. Salmon, Joint Administrator of Sangli, and Political Agent, Cutch, sub pro tem., has been appointed to be Assistant to the Governor-General's Agent at Baroda, in charge of the Oknamandal district and commandant of the Wagheer Corps, in succession to Lieut.-Colonel W. Scott, whose services have been placed at the disposal of the Military Department.

Mr. R. A. Sterndale, who has been appointed to the Currency Office at Madras, has given over charge of the Bombay Office to Mr. Groves, who had charge of the Madras Office.

Nawab Zafar Jung (Shums-ul-Mulk) laid before the Nizam on Monday the presents he had brought for his Highness from London. Among other things were an album of Jubilee photographs, a writing-desk, a new kind of watch, a musical box, and a camera. His Highness had previously received from the Minister two Florentine and two English horses, as well as a magnificent watch and chain, set in diamonds. Sardar Diler Jung presented three pug dogs, which the Nizam had specially asked him to bring, and a whip with a watch in the handle.

At the Cantonment Magistrate's Court, Secunderabad, the other day, a novel appeal was made to Major Robertson. One Mullgu, a butler, who had been convicted on his own confession of theft in a building, and sentenced by the Assistant Cantonment Magistrate to eighteen months' imprisonment, sought, through the advocacy of one of the members of the local Bar, to have his sentence mitigated on the ground that he wanted to get married, and that this long incarceration would injure his prospects in this respect in the direction in which he had already fixed his eye. Major Robertson, however, remembering the callousness of the law to all domestic feelings, had to steel his heart against this piteous appeal, and rejected it with tears in his eyes. At least, the local paper says so.

THE FINANCES OF NETHERLANDS-INDIA.

The report drawn up by Mr. Fenton on the finances and on the budget for 1888 of the Dutch East Indian possessions has been issued as a Parliamentary Paper. Mr. Fenton writes:—

It appears from the explanatory statement which accompanies the Netherlands-Indian Budget for 1888 that the surplus for 1885 amounts in reality to nearly fl.1,000,000 more than the Minister had expected, namely, to about fl.2,109,000 (£175,750), this satisfactory result being attributable almost exclusively to a higher yield of the ways and means than had been anticipated. It further appears that a somewhat similar favourable state of affairs may be assumed as regards the service of the year 1886, and that whereas the budget estimates showed a deficit of very nearly fl.5,500,000, the accounts, when completed, will reveal an excess of revenue over expenditure of about fl.1,100,000. This affords once more a proof of what I observed in my last year's financial report as to the vague and uncertain character of the budget estimates for Netherlands-India

With respect to the service of the current year (1887), it is scarcely necessary to say that no details can as yet be given; but the Minister states that it may be safely assumed that, in consequence of the considerable increase which has taken place in the price of coffee since the budget estimates for this year were made up, the general result will be far more favourable than was at that time expected, and that the accounts, when closed, will show a substantial surplus in place of a deficit of fl.3,842,885 as anticipated by the budget.

The Netherlands-Indian Budget for 1888 now laid before the Chamber presents the following totals:—Expenditure: Netherlands, fl.23,727,879; Netherlands-India, fl.115,148,643; total, fl.138,876,522. Revenue: Netherlands fl.29,286,876; Netherlands-India, fl.104,497,184; total, fl.133,784,060. Deficit, fl.5,092,462.

For the current year the totals of the budget, as modified and finally approved by the States-General, were:—Total expenditure, fl.138,519,953; total revenue, fl.133,561,632; deficit, fl.4,958,321.

The only practical difference, therefore, between these two budgets, is that the deficit anticipated on the service of 1888 exceeds by fl.134,141 that assumed for 1887. But in the same manner that the latter will, as there seems little or no doubt, be transformed into a surplus, the former may also disappear and become a surplus, especially as the Minister has deemed it prudent, in establishing the amount to be derived in 1888 from the sale of Government coffee, to assume the moderate average price of c.40 per half-kilogram, whilst the selling price, as at present quoted at Amsterdam of "good ordinary" coffee, is c.53 per half-kilogram; and as the crop of the current year, which will come to market in 1888, is known to be a very short one—the quantity assumed as likely to be offered for sale next year in the Netherlands, being only about 400,000 piculs, as compared with the budget estimate of 630,000 piculs for the current year—the probabilities would appear to be in favour of the present market price holding its ground.

Now, the above-mentioned estimate of 400,000 piculs represents 47,600,000 half-kilograms. If, therefore, the state of the market during the year 1888 should be such as to admit of that quantity of coffee being disposed of at an average price of c.53 per half-kilogram, instead of at the rate of c.47, as assumed in the budget, the result would be an increased receipt from this source of revenue, as compared with the estimate, of about fl.2,850,000, a sum which would in itself be sufficient to cover more than half the deficit shown by the budget.

The estimate of expenditure includes the three following items, namely, under the head of Civil Public Works, fl.6,774,340 for the construction of Government railways in Netherlands-India, and fl.1,140,000 for establishing a line of telegraph wires from Java to the Islands of Bali and Celebes, together £659,528 ; and under the head of Finance Department, fl.1,854,000 (£154,500) for interest. payable by the administration of Netherlands-India, to the Home Exchequer, as nterest on that portion of the 3½ per cent. (formerly 4 per cent.) Public Debt of the Netherlands, which was incurred on behalf of the said administration by the Home Government.

THE INDIAN OPIUM REVENUE.

The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian writes :—The views held in India, and especially in Bombay, respecting the decline in the amount of revenue obtained from opium are not shared by authorities here who are well acquainted with the working of the old system of taxation of opium in China. There was some doubt and delay at first as to the precise date at which the convention should come into force, and large stocks had been accumulated in Shanghai in expectation of it. To these temporary circumstances the decline of the revenue in India is attributed. It is not, as I have said, believed that the opium convention will have any permanent effect of this nature. The competition of the native drug is exactly what it was last year and the year before. It is intended for a wholly different class of consumers to Indian opium.

ENTERPRISE IN NORTH BORNEO.

On the 15th inst. the British Borneo Trading and Planting Company (Limited) shipped, per Glencoe, a large saw mill to be erected on their estate of 20,000 acres in Sandakan Bay, North Borneo. The plant includes boilers and engines of 200-horse power, large galvanised iron sheds, a portable railway, and all the necessary saws, &c., for treating thirty to forty hardwood logs per day. With it also was shipped one of Death's automatic feeding steam power fibre machines. This will be followed by a steam launch, now being completed on the Clyde, capable of steaming nine miles an hour for 300 miles without recoaling. The whole has been designed by and completed under the personal superintendence of the company's engineer and manager, Mr. Fred. Boultbee, C.E., who for some considerable time acted as engineer to the Sultan of Johore's large steam saw mills in Johore. Mr. Boultbee left London on the 18th inst. for Borneo, vid Marseilles and Singapore. His assistant engineer, Mr. Venis, and clerk, Mr. Penney, proceeding with the machinery on board the Glencoe. A site for the mill has been prepared, and Mr. Boultbee expects to have the machinery erected and running by the middle of February.

The Exhibition of last year formed a convenient opportunity of testing the value of many of our colonial woods. After the close of the Exhibition Mr. Allen Ransome, of Chelsea, tested all the woods in the Exhibition by sawing, planing, and moulding them for various purposes. He also tested their breaking strains and shrinkages in seasoning. From his report to the Government it appears that Borneo timber occupies a very high position among colonial and foreign woods, and one species, viz., Billian or Borneo ironwood, stands prominent for strength and durability, it having the highest breaking strain of any known wood (nearly double that of teak), combined with the singular feature that it was the only timber that did not shrink at all, either in width or thickness, in the drying process. It is also, like most of the Borneo woods, impervious to the white ant and the teredos or seaworm. It is largely used in China and the East for wharves, dock piles, and anything requiring exposure. A large demand is anticipated for sleepers for the Chinese railways. From its strength and non-shrinkage it should also be largely used for shipbuilding, railway carriages, mansel wheels, keys and treenails, parquet flooring, &c., and as it can be sold in this country for less than teak, it should be a serious competitor with that wood. Another Borneo timber which should find a ready sale in this country is sirayah or red cedar. This is used as flooring and scantling by the Chinese, and nothing else is used in Mauritius. However, now that the forests in the Straits and elsewhere are becoming exhausted, the demand for the markets in the East is likely to preclude much Borneo timber being shipped to this country at present, unless very remunerative prices can be obtained.

Since the company was formed, in February last, considerable progress has been made by the planting manager, Mr. A. Walker, in felling, clearing, and planting a portion of the estate. Up to the present he has planted about 10,000 pepper vines, 3,000 Manila hemp stools, and 28,000 pine-apple plants. Specimens of pineapple and other leaf fibres treated by Death's machine have been sent home and favourably reported on, and a shipment of the same may be expected next year. The company, it will be remembered, hold the exclusive rights of Death's machine for Borneo. At the end of the next season, about the end of February, clearing and planting will be vigorously resumed. Native labour is plentiful and cheap, and the Chinese are immigrating in large numbers to the neighbourhood. Agencies have been established by the company in all the chief towns in India, China, and elsewhere, and the enterprise seems to have every prospect of success before it.

THE NEW TARIFF IN INDO-CHINA.

The commercial régime in French Indo-China has just been made the subject of a discussion by the Paris Society of Political Economy, in the course of which a very exhaustive examination of the tendency of the Tong-King duties was made by M. Joseph Chailly, whose observations, says the Manchester Guardian, have attracted the more attention in France because he was the intimate associate of M. Paul Bert in organising the administration of Tong-King. As a member of the staff of the Economiste Français, M. Chailly is also a colleague of M. Paul Leroy-Beaulieu, who some time ago, in a weak moment, admitted that France might well impose some slight differential duties in Tong-King as a compensation for her military sacrifices in opening up the Red River to trade. M. Chailly did not overlook any of the arguments which have been advanced in favour of the attempt to reserve the Tong-King market for French manufacturers. He admitted that the mother country had as much right to expect to derive benefit from its colonies as the landowner or settler from land reclaimed, tilled, and irrigated by him. The only question with M. Chailly is as to the best way of making the colonial possessions of France remunerative. Now nobody supposes that Tong-King will immediately return to France the large sums invested in its conquest. The repayment is to come in the form of increased traffic and commercial relations between France and Tong-King, and the acquisition of wealth by subjects of France, who in spending their gains will distribute them through the various channels of industry at home. In this way increase of wealth by French subjects will in the end increase the wealth of the people of France generally. So far it would appear as though there was some reason in the argument that France would act foolishly if she permitted all the world to trade with her colonies while she alone bore the cost of conquering and administering them. But M. Chailly showed that it would be still more foolish to defeat her own object and deprive herself of any return at all in the attempt to exclude others from a share of the benefits. France desires that her colonies shall buy manufactures only from France. But at present she can only very imperfectly supply the articles required, and the articles which she can supply are precisely those which, because of their relatively high cost of production in France, she is obliged to protect even in the home markets. Taking into consideration the rates of freight and the effect of the differential duties, all this means that France will endeavour to sell her manufactures to Tong-King and Cochin China merchants at prices at least double those at which the same goods could otherwise be bought from other producers. Consumption in Tong-King will in consequence be reduced at least one-half. The merchants will find their trade declining, and, becoming discouraged, they will retire from the business in order to escape ruin. The consumers will find themselves worse fed, clothed, lodged, and supplied with appliances than their competitors elsewhere, and, far from the productive resources of the colonies being developed, they will be abandoned, the revenues will become stationary or decline, and ultimately there will be deficits for France to pay. With Free Trade, on the other hand, the colonies would buy in the cheapest market, and as the producers would be on an equal footing with their rivals, capital would be attracted and production would be stimulated. The French manufacturers might not get the benefit directly, but the French merchants would be enriched only to spend their wealth in France. Now it makes no difference to the people of France through which particular class the wealth comes to that country. Moreover, it must be borne in mind that the French manufacturers will not be compelled to close their mills if they are not protected in Tong-King. That market is of little or no value to them as yet. The argument for continued protection in the home market, on the ground that it is of vital importance to them and that they have already been induced to invest their capital, cannot be applied to a new market ; on the other hand, Protection will be absolutely fatal to Tong-King as a colony. But even if it be argued that under a Free Trade régime the merchants of Tong-King would be largely, if not exclusively, foreigners, who would carry their acquired wealth to their own countries and not to France, the result would be even worse under a differential régime. For Tong-King possesses coal, iron, copper, cotton, and silk ; and as foreign capitalists are more enterprising than Frenchmen, under a system of high prices they would do in Tong-King as they have done in Bombay—erect mills and works for production on the spot. Thus, if differential duties do not absolutely prevent the development of Tong-King, they must lead to the development of local manufacturing enterprises by foreigners ; and how could France or French manufacturers be benefited in either case ? Another probable consequence will be the revival of Chinese contraband trade on a great scale, and the direct encouragement of those practical operations which France has taken so much trouble to repress. Finally, M. Chailly pointed out that a great incentive to the French conquest of Tong-King has been the desire to open up a short route to Yunnan and Western China under French influence, and that the exclusion of the cheapest goods from that route will favour the utilisation of the Yangtsze-Kiang and Burmah routes in preference, and will practically close the Red River route.

AYOOB KHAN'S SURRENDER.

The following is an account sent from Sarakhs, and published in St. Petersburg, of the manner in which Ayoob Khan surrendered himself to the British authorities. According to this statement, "as a matter of fact Ayoob Khan had no necessity to give himself up to the English, seeing that he had at his disposal over 3,000 armed men, and could have remained at large for an indefinite period. It is understood that he was induced to act as he did through pique at the attitude of Russia ; which latter Power gave him to understand that he was not to count on her support in his attempt, either in the matter of protection or money. It was owing to his disenchantment on this score that he refused to take refuge on Russian territory, which he could easily have done. Ayoob Khan, with a small escort, rode into Meshed on horseback, and sent a message to the British agent in that town to the effect that an elder of the town of Herat wanted to speak with him. When the agent made his appearance Ayoob Khan dismounted from his horse, and, stretching out his hand, said, 'You have now in your hands Ayoob Khan, who surrenders to the glorious and gentle Empress of India, on whose mercy he throws himself.'"

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

SURGEON-MAJOR G. RANKING, 5th Bengal Cavalry, has passed the examination in Persian in the first division of the Degree of Honour.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL WARDROP, 3rd Dragoon Guards, has been appointed to the command of the 12th Lancers, and has been ordered home to take up his appointment.

COLONEL WILLIAM JEFFREYS, Royal (late Bengal) Engineers, is permitted to retire from the service from Nov 11.

DEPUTY SURGEON-GENERAL FERGUSON, Medical Staff, whose tour of Indian Service has expired, is directed to proceed home on being relieved by Deputy Surgeon-General Bradshaw.

THE following appointments are made:—

17th Bengal Infantry.—Lieutenant Williams, Liverpool Regiment, to be officiating wing officer, on probation.

40th Bengal Infantry.—Lieutenant Worseley, Royal Artillery, to be officiating officer, on probation.

6th Punjab Infantry.—Lieutenants Taylor and Hutchinson to be Adjutant and Quartermaster, respectively.

THE 21st Madras Infantry is the Madras regiment chosen to return to India in the spring of 1888.

COLONEL OMMANEY is appointed Commandant, 39th Bengal Infantry.

CAPTAIN SIR R. COLLETON, Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General for Musketry, has gone to Shillong on inspection duty.

FIVE HUNDRED men of the Burma Police are expected on the 11th instant for Burma, and a similar number from Lucknow on the 25th.

MAJOR G. W. SAWYER, Military Accounts Department, Pay Examiner, Bombay, will, on being relieved of those duties, proceed to Bombay as Presidency Paymaster.

THE Government of India have decided that non-commissioned officers serving on the Unattached List may, in special and exceptional cases, be granted furlough to England on private affairs under the same conditions as the indulgence is at present allowed to regimental non-commissioned officers of the British Army, and on the distinct understanding that the State is put to no extra expense thereby. This decision has, we believe, no reference to the special grant of furlough to a limited number of non-commissioned officers of British corps and batteries, which has been sanctioned by Government, and does not extend the privileges of that order to non-commissioned officers on the Unattached List who are now merely admitted to the benefit of the rule under which Government allowed regimental non-commissioned officers serving in India to proceed to England on furlough on private affairs in exceptional cases only. The grant of the privilege is, we believe, accompanied by a free passage in a troopship both to and from England, and the benefit conferred by the decision is, therefore, a substantial one.

THE Government of India have ruled that the Order (given below), dated May 17, 1887, shall apply to Medical Officers withdrawn from civil employment for field service in Burma from the date of that order:—"A Medical Officer withdrawn from a civil employment will be allowed a consolidated salary equal to that of his grade when in charge of a regiment, whatever the total of his grade pay, plus the half staff in his civil appointment is less than such consolidated pay, from the time of his handing over charge to the date of his rejoining without delay, after his services are no longer required in the field."

CERTAIN important changes affecting the Army Hospital Native Corps in the three Presidences are to come into force from April 1 next, with a view to improving the position of the men and raising the efficiency of the Corps. These changes comprise the grant of a more liberal scale of clothing, a portion of which will be paid for out of the kit money, and half mounting allowance, while the remainder will be issued at the public expense at a cost per man not exceeding to Rs. 9-9; the grant of kit money on enlistment at the rate of Rs. 15 per recruit, and of an annual half mounting allowance of Rs. 2-8 per man; a free passage to their homes when invalided, and when proceeding to and from their homes on sick leave, and the privilege to all hospital attendants, who claim their discharge on the expiration of three years' service, of reckoning their former service towards pension and gratuity on re-enlistment.

IN consequence of the Secretary of State for India having objected to the appointment of Captain E. E. Money, Quartermaster-General's Department, to the grade of Assistant Quartermaster-General, the Government of India has been compelled to refuse sanction to Captain Money retaining that appointment until he becomes qualified to hold it by virtue of his promotion to the rank of major. Captain Money reverts, therefore, to Deputy Assistant Quartermaster General, which appointment he will be permitted to hold until he completes his five years' tour of service in that grade, when he will have to return to regimental duty. The objection to the appointment is made under paragraph 71, section V., Queen's Regulations, under which the appointments of Assistant Adjutant-General and Assistant Quartermaster-General are to be held exclusively by field officers and it is extremely unfortunate for Captain Money that he will not complete the qualifying service for promotion to the rank of major until some six or seven months after he has completed his tour of service as a Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, and vacated his appointment under the five-year rule.

COTTON GOODS IN THE CENTRAL PROVINCES.

In the report on the railway-borne trade of the Central Provinces for the year 1886-87, which, by the way, is published under the auspices of the Department of Land Records, Settlements and Agriculture, Mr. J. B. Fuller give some information regarding the trade in cotton goods. He writes:—

The imports of cotton-goods show a considerable decline when compared with those of the previous year, but [are, on the other hand, larger than they were in 1884-85. The quantities of yarn imported correspond pretty closely with the quantities imported during 1884-85, though there is a marked advantage on the side of yarn of English manufacture. The import of English cotton-goods was much smaller than in the preceding year, but still much larger than in either 1884-85 or 1883 84. The import of Indian piece-goods shows, however, a large falling-off when compared with the import of any of three years preceding. Thit is entirely due to the success of the Empress Mills at Nagpur, the exports of cotton piece-goods from the Nagpur block to other Central Provinces blocks amounting to 12,701 maunds against 7,516 maunds in the preceding year. The Provinces received considerably more piece-goods from Nagpur than from Bombay. But there are no signs that the competition of the Nagpur mills is driving English piece-goods from the market.

As regards the cotton crops, Mr. Fuller says that of 1885 was above the average, but that of 1886 considerably surpassed it. The amount exported during 1886-87 was three times as much as that exported during 1884-85, and the receipt from cotton exceeded those of 1884 85 by no less than 23 lahks of rupees, and those of the previous year by fourteen lahks. Out of 2,18,495 maunds of cotton exported 1,29,416 were contributed by the Wardha and Nagpore Districts, and 45,390 by the Nimar District. Complaints have been made of a falling-off in the exports of cotton to England, but Mr. Fuller tells us that a hospitable market can be obtained within the country, so that the interests of the Provinces do not appear to have suffered.

A CORRESPONDENT has sent to the Madras Times the following curious petition, received by him about thirteen years ago, shortly after the Prince of Wales's visit to Madras. It is a remarkable specimen of English as she is wrote:—"Most Honoured Sir,—That your unfortunate Petitioner most respectfully beg to state that he lost on the 18-12-75 an affectionate son of 5 years old to whom the death was caused (with an almost inextinguishable violence) by the fall of Sky-Rocket on his head and the brain of which came out through the hole caused by the accidental fall of said sky-rocket fired for the Handsome and Public Show exhilarated in Honour of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, on the 11th Dec., 1875, at Rajahmundry. He is plunged into profound regret for such deprivation and heavy loss of his affectionate Son which happened by the consequence of his Royal Highness—Spectacles. Doctor Hitchcock tried, with an utmost power, to cure the wound, but his faithful treatment terminated unsuccessful by the decrease of Providence. He therefore prays your merciful and well-dignified honour will be kind enough to recommend him (Petitioner) to the Government for obtaining any means of his subsistence as he is very poor and lost his son."

HONOURING LORD CONNEMARA.—A Tamil song composed in honour of Lord Connemara was recited during his Excellency's recent visit to Madura. The following is the English rendering:—"We are at a loss to understand what penance we had made that God the preserver of the world should favour us with this opportunity of seeing you whom He has purposely created to rule over, and do all possible good to, the Madras Presidency, which forms an ornament on the face of the woman India. Will you be pleased to present our compliments to our mother Lady Connemara, who does not murmur for her present separation from you, because she understands fully that a wife is a part of her husband, and consequently she is with her husband wherever he may be? When we saw you that reside in the hearts of your subjects, wiping off the tears of many, and relieving them from the sorrow in which they were hopelessly plunged, our joy knew no bounds. It is the wish of our hearts that you, the brother of Lord Mayo, who having sacrificed his life for the good of India in one of her islands, went over to the next world to preserve it, should become a Viceroy like your father-in-law, the famous Lord Dalhousie. We pray that you should continue the favours you have shown by conferring the most unexpected titles on the distinguished Hindus, and by encouraging institutions. Paul Rottori, the manager, the masters, and pupils of St. Xavier's High School offer their ardent prayers to God that he should bless you with long life and prosperity."

EXPLORATIONS IN SIAM.

The first meeting of the new session of the Royal Geographical Society was held in the lecture theatre of the London University, Burlington House, when a paper was read by Mr. J. M'Carthy (Superintendent of Surveys in Siam) on the subject of his explorations in Siam. The chair was taken by General R. Strachey, R.E., C.S.I., president of the society, and among those present were Sir Rawson Rawson, Sir Henry Barkly, General Sir Peter Lumsden, General Sir F. J. Goldsmid, Sir John Kirk, Admiral Sir Erasmus Ommanney, the Hon. G. C. Brodrick, Mr. E. M. Satow, Professor Keane, Mr. Holt Hallett and Mr. A. R. Colquhoun.

The Chairman briefly introduced Mr. M'Carthy, who proceeded to read his paper. After a few preliminary details on the physical aspect of the country Mr. M'Carthy said :—

The population comprises Siamese proper, Lao, Cambodians, Burmans, Aunamites, Malays, Chinese, and many tribes of hill-men, as Karens and others. The people for the most part settle on the banks of the rivers, and are employed chiefly in cultivating rice. There are but few villages distant from the large rivers, and in the mountainous part of the kingdom the towns and villages are built in open flat valleys, picturesquely surrounded by the mountains. There is one peculiar feature in this population of different nationalities, and that is they do not amalgamate with one another ; and thus it comes about that near Bangkok itself villages of Burmans and Annamites are found living in separate communities, preserving their own language and customs. The climate is far from being enviable. Every one who travels through the country must sooner or later pay the penalty, and get a sharp attack of jungle fever.

One of my first journeys was to Rahang, or Muang Tak, for the purpose of making a survey from the British boundary at Mya Waddi for the construction of a line of telegraph. I started from Bangkok on Dec. 25, 1881, with a small steamer drawing six feet of water. The river flows through flat country, both sides showing great rice-cultivation, well studded with villages and numerous temples. The villages are continuous, consisting principally of wooden houses, hidden away in groves of cocoa-nut palms, plantain trees, and bamboos ; they seem all alike, and it was difficult to tell where one village began and another ended. On the slopes of the banks advantage is taken of the rich deposit left by the river as it subsides, and tobacco is planted along its whole course. The country is an uninterrupted flat until Chainat is reached, when a few isolated hills break the monotony of the scene. At Paknam Po, the junction of the two main branches of the river, I changed the steam launch for a flat-bottomed Lao boat, and pulled up the Mei Ping, or western branch. For long stretches this branch of the river has not the trace of a habitation, and the villages, such as they are, are very poor. Until Rahang is reached there is no place of any importance except Kampang Pet, which, however, is important more from past associations than for anything at the present time, there being many ruins of temples in the district, made of blocks of laterite, which is found cropping above the surface of the ground all over this part of the country. Rahang is found to be composed of a number of wooden houses, all of the famous teak wood, which is found in large quantities in the forests of the district. The country between Rahang and the British frontier is mostly mountainous and a perfect wilderness of jungle, there being few even of the Karens living there. A new interest is attached to this part of the country, on account of the energy and ability of Mr. Holt Hallett, who some time ago placed before the Society his proposals for a railway which was to connect Maulmain with China. I do not presume to question the feasibility of such an undertaking, but considered as a commercial enterprise it is well to remember that the Indian railway between Poonah and Bombay, on account of the heavy cost of construction, and maintenance of the portion of the line through the hills is, I understand, not a paying line. What would be the cost of a line over a wilderness of mountains, where the rainfall is measured, not by tens, but by hundreds of inches ; and again, where is a traffic of the same amount as there is on the Indian line to come from ? The trade, such as it is, that finds its way to Maulmain is forced there by want of proper means of communication with Bangkok. I have been told by some traders from Yunnan that the quickest route for them to take, when on a pilgrimage to Mecca, is by Bangkok. They follow the route to Chieng Rai, thence to M. Phray, thence to Utaradet ; here their troubles begin, for they cannot depend on securing boats, the only means of communication with Bangkok. Whatever the trade of Siam, most of it is in British hands. British enterprise holds its own against all comers, in Siam as well as any other part of the world.

But to my journeys : and now I will try and place before you a few of the most interesting points of one of my missions to the Malay Peninsula. We arrived at Songkla or Singora, a very prettily situated little town. We next moved on to Tani, the capital of the small Malay State of Patani. Patani was originally a very large country, and was broken up by the Siamese into nine different States. The ruler of each State is under the direct control of the Governor of Singora or Song Kla. It was very difficult to get anyone to accompany me to the tops of the hills, which, it was urged, were the abodes of spirits, and not visited by their fathers or grandfathers. They, however, were satisfied to know that my grandfather also did not go there, and after the usual delays a few consented to accompany me. The Malay Peninsula, apart from its interesting position, has many other points worthy of attention. To use the new diction, there are two spheres of influence, the one English and the other Siamese. The inhabitants of the northern portion of the peninsula are all Siamese and Chinese ; then come the Sams Sams, a mixture of Malays and Siamese, and who talk a mixed language, but are Buddhists in religion ; then the Malays proper, who are Mahomedan in religion. Besides these there are two very curious and interesting tribes, or rather remnants of tribes, the supposed aborigines of the country. They are called by the Malay "Orang Utano," or wild men, and are also known as Sakais and Samangs. The Sakai has soft black skin and wool ; the Samang has also a very black skin, but rough, and has coarse straight hair. They wander in search of food through the endless forests, the sun their only guide, unencumbered with clothing, leaving no trace of their track. They are clever in snaring fish and game. As weapons, they use bow and arrows, and pea-shooters made from reeds, one of which I saw was eight feet between the knots ; the dart is soaked in vegetable poison. These poor people are now mostly confined to the tops of the highest mountains. The forests are very heavy, with dense undergrowth, chiefly cane-brakes ; fruit trees are very common, particularly the famous strong smelling durian, which grows on the loftiest trees. As a single fruit weighs five or six pounds, the sensation is far from pleasant when picking one's way through the jungle, and hearing them crushing through the trees all round. The forests are alive with game ; but the jungle is so thick that the only chance of having a shot at anything is to shelter oneself on a platform in a tree overhanging a favourite drinking-place for the animals, which comprise elephants, rhinoceros, tigers, tapirs, pig, and many varieties of deer. The tigers of the Malay Peninsula are mostly man-eaters, and as such are dangerous brutes. The Malay Peninsula is famous for its mineral wealth—gold, tin and lead being very common, and worked almost solely by Chinamen. Coal is also found. At the sources of the Perak and Tolubein rivers there are several places where the Chinese extract the gold from alluvial deposits ; but there are more places showing that gold-seeking in these localities is not of recent date. The Chinese are not merely miners, but they are fast supplanting the Malays all over the peninsula in every industry. Opium is doing its work of destruction among the Malays, who are all immoderate opium-smokers.

Another of my journeys was to the north-east border of Siam. Contradictory reports came in frequently concerning raids of Haws on the north-eastern frontier of Siam, and villages were reported as plundered and destroyed, the whereabouts of which puzzled the heads of those "who ought to know." It was then decided to send an expedition to the north-eastern frontier, and the King was graciously pleased to appoint me to the command of it. My friend Mr. Leonowens, a young Englishman, expressed a wish to accompany the expedition. His desire was soon gratified, and he was appointed to the command of the escort, with orders to select 200 men from the regular army. Mr. George Bush, the youngest son of Captain Bush, of Bangkok, who had been my companion on other journeys, also accompanied me. I took with me eight Siamese gentlemen, taken from a number whom I had trained to elementary surveying ; they proved of very great service in many troubles. Elephants and bullocks are provided us to transport our baggage to Khorat, the next place of importance. The road passes through a forest called Dong Phraya Fai. Tradition has cast a gloom over this place, and an entry into it is dreaded by the ordinary Siamese. It is said you cannot escape catching fever there. The name was altered in the late king's reign from Dong Phraya Fai (Forest of the Lord of Fire) to Dong Phraya Yen (Forest of the Lord of Cold), and the climate is reported to have much improved since the change of title. That a railway should be constructed between Saraburi and Khorat is a very old idea, and able engineers have favourably reported on both its feasibility and desirability. Khorat is a very important city, the capital of a district of the same name. The walls of the city are enormous monuments of labour ; but they have a general look of decay ; they are about 5,400 feet long, and 3,200 feet broad. In the district are to be found wonderful ruins of stone temples, and involuntarily, while gazing on them, the question rises in the mind, Who were those who carved the beautiful tracings on the walls, and bowed down before the now crumbling stone figures ? All knowledge of them is lost in the past. Where clouds of incense rose to "the million gods" now all is still.

Travelling north from Khorat, our next destination was Nongkhai, and so flat is the nature of the country over which we go that carts are used. All this country, however, during the rainy season, must be a perfect sea, judging from the water-marks on the trees, four feet up the trunk. During the months of March and April all has a parched appearance, and a want of water is a great difficulty with travellers. There are numerous swamps all over the country. Salt is procured in large quantities. It appears in the form of an efflorescence on the surface of the ground, and on a cool morning has all the appearance of a hoar frost. The measured distance from Khorat to Nongkhai is 283 miles, and can be comfortably marched in twenty days, including halts. Nongkhai is a very important town on the Meinam-Kong. Here the river has a magnificent appearance, the channel of the river, when in flood, being about 1,000 yards across. In the month of March it is at its lowest, about 25 feet below flood-level, and then has a discharge of 48,000 cubic feet a second. Nothing can be added to the wonderful journey performed by Francis Garnier up the Meinam-Kong. He is known to some members of the Society, as some seventen years ago he personally received the gold medal.

The site of the once powerful Weing Chan is not far from Nongkhai. The chief of the city rebelled against his father, the chief of Luang Phrabang, and after gathering strength, rebelled in turn against Bangkok, when it was totally destroyed by the Siamese. The story has it that when Chau Anu was Governor of Wieng Chan, about the year 1825, his son was summoned to Bangkok with a body of men to assist in digging the canal connecting Tachin with Bangkok. It would appear that the Phraya in charge of the canal works insulted him, first kicked and then flogged him. When he returned to Wieng Chan his angry father rebelled against Bangkok, but his revolt proved a failure. The army from Bangkok totally destroyed Wieng Chan, while Chau Anu escaped to Annam. His daughter, the fame of whose beauty had spread far and wide, was taken captive. It is said of her that, at different periods of the day, the colour of her body changed, blue being one of the colours she assumed. Thinking that the Bangkok victors, if they had no respect for her person, would at least have some for the temples, she took refuge there and clung to a famous emerald image of Buddha. This, however, did not baulk the victorious general, he seized both Princess and image, and sent them to Bangkok.

It is no disparagement of this volume to assert that at every page there is internal evidence that it is the handiwork of the sex feminine. The characters all act, think, and move according to the lines which a woman would think natural. As, however, the leading characters are with a few exceptions daughters of Eve, it is, perhaps, just as well that their doings and sayings should be regulated according to the standard of the sex. The story is peculiar, and, so far as we know, absolutely original. We cannot call to mind a single novel based upon the peculiar circumstance in which Gabrielle and her sister lost a mother and found a father; and, withal, the plot is so carefully veiled that it is only a few pages before the development that the reader is able to give the faintest guess as to the dénouement.

Mrs. Bradshaw is evidently a careful thinker. She is an adept at analysing the characters she paints, and the result is eminently satisfactory. Gabrielle is a most exquisite portrait of an earnest, genuine, beautiful, noble damsel. From the first moment she is introduced as a baby mourning a dead mother to her last appearance as a happy fiancée, interest in her never flags. Not a mean idea, not an unworthy action emanates from a girl who is the very embodiment of love and affection. Quite the contrary is her sister Bertha, a handsome but hard, a lovely but despicable daughter, rich in wealth, but poor as regards all the nobler instincts which should adorn and dignify the human breast; heartless she is hated, cold she never clings; she is disliked, she is unloved. The reader, indeed, almost regrets that she did not marry that most odious of mankind, Leonard Trench, a faithless and fickle youth, blessed with no redeeming qualities save beauty to hide a barrenness of mind which culminated in his engagement at one and the same time to two sisters—one wealthy, the other wise; both beautiful, but not both tender, delicate and refined.

Mrs. Bradshaw knows how to please, and "Gabrielle" is not the least pleasing of her pleasant books.

UNIVERSAL PHONOGRAPHY.†

Mr. Benson has compiled a very ingenious pamphlet, tending to show that a universal system of phonography is at once feasible and desirable. We question both these dogmas. Phonography to be universal must be based on phonetic spelling; but have the advocates of the latter ever reflected that no two nations—perhaps no two towns—pronounce the same word in the same way? Take, for instance, scientific terms. Would a Frenchman and an Englishman agree? Indeed, could they agree as to the pronunciation of any ten consecutive words? And if they did not agree botany and other sciences would give different names to the same plant, the spelling in each case being in accordance with the nationality of the speller. Thus much for feasibility. It remains to consider whether phonography is desirable. We assert without the slightest hesitation that it is not, and we question, indeed, whether it be possible. There are many languages which have letters not used by other people. How will phonography, based as it is upon phonetic spelling, convey to a person any accurate idea as to a sound which he cannot himself pronounce? But, even if this difficulty be overcome, the alphabet of phonography must include every sound in every language in the universe. In other words, an Englishman learning to write his own tongue must needs perforce study sounds and letters utterly useless to him. Surely this is increasing rather than diminishing the labour of education? One argument remains, and it is overwhelming. Each language has its own requirements to which its alphabet is adapted by the experience of countless ages. To alter all this, to give to the East the nostrums of the West, or to give to the West the fads of the East, is to court failure. It may, we think, be assumed with all fairness that the inventors of language (whoever and wherever they may have been) knew their requirements better than Mr. Benson, whose aims are, to our judgment, as sound as his plans are the reverse.

THE BIMETALLIC PAR.‡

M. Cernuschi's pamphlet on the "Bimetallic par" merits careful perusal. Several points to which he alludes are, if not novel, at least striking. The loss of exchange, he tells us, increases by a geometrical progression. Thus the first fall of one penny in the exchange involves a sale of 60,87,001 rupees on the part of the Government of India; but if the rate drops 6d. the amount is increased to 186⅔ millions. This may be true, but it is not generally realised. Then, again, the exchange between England and India practically imposes a protection of 33 per cent. in India against English goods, and a protection of 25 per cent. in England in favour of Indian commodities. Lastly, M. Cernuschi tells us that if only England would introduce the bimetallic par the rupee would revert to 2s., "and this reinstatement will cost nothing either to the Indian Treasury or to anybody." By all that is sacred, then, let us have the bimetallic par; but we must avow we are utterly at a loss to understand whence comes the enhanced 6d. in the 2s.? If nobody is a loser, how can somebody be a gainer?

COMO AND ITALIAN LAKE LAND.*

Year by year the "upper ten" flock by hundreds to the Continent—some here, some there, and, of course, a considerable number to the Italian lakes. "But," says Mr. Lund, himself a frequent visitor to these parts, "People came and went, and going knew little more of the resources of the queen of Italian waters than when they came. The want of some book in English to point out what the lake had to offer seemed to be at the root of the general failure." This drawback fortunately now no longer exists, for the gentleman in question has published a hand-book which is at once so complete, so interesting, so overrunning with information that henceforth ignorance must be deemed inexcusable, and want of knowledge beyond the pale of pardon.

It would be difficult to exaggerate the charm of Mr. Lund's work. Even taken up as a mere whim of the hour, there is much which will be read with interest. Sketches of biography, legends, historical resumés, all mingle together in fascinating disarray, and the mind is soothed with the glowing softness of Italian scenery, Italian beauties, and Italian marvels. But as a vade mecum for the traveller the volume is beyond compare. Mr. Lund, as he loiters amidst the classical scenes of a classical past, where

> "The poet's splendid dreams
> Have hallowed each grove and each hill,
> And the beautiful forms of ancient faith
> Are lingering round us still."

loves at every turn to pause and admire "a thing of beauty," and, as page after page of explanation pass by, the "joy for ever" of the poet's imagination becomes a reality; and the wanderer finds new pleasures, new sensations of delight, new paths of experience. And, withal, there is such a happy medium as regards what is told and what is left in the limbo of forgetfulness. Glances here, fuller details there, a line in one place, a page in another; a picture on one occasion, a bold outline when art is poor, and the result scarce worthy of contemplation. Lastly, Mr. Lund's enthusiasm infects the reader, and, as scene after scene of exquisite beauty stands forth on the scroll of description, one learns to revel in the charms of this most charming country—charms of which the enjoyment will be enhanced by familiarity with the pages of Mr. Lund's most valuable and delightful "Cosmo and Italian Lake Land."

OUR CHILDREN.†

Dr. Bell's most admirable little treatise on children deserves the highest praise. It is so simple that the veriest tyro can understand the directions, and yet there is in its pages an amount of experience and talent, in every way worthy of the high reputation of its learned author. Medical books are, as a rule, a mistake, in so far as they enable amateurs to dabble in professional doctoring; but in the present instance this drawback is reduced to a minimum, and the work may with advantage find a home in every family where rosy faces smile and young feet patter.

RAILWAY construction in Upper Burma ought to pay well enough if one may go by the reports on the Mu Valley Railway, one branch of which is to open up the Chindwin. The total length of this line will be 360 miles, and its estimated cost will be Rs. 60,000 per mile. The Chief Commissioner is of opinion that it will pay 2 per cent. after the first two years, and 4 per cent. after six or eight years. Many competent authorities think this an under-estimate, on account of the acknowledged richness of the lands through which the line will pass. For instance, Mogoung is the headquarters of the india-rubber trade of that district, which even now is very large, and is likely to be much larger if the railway runs through it. Moreover, there is a considerable jadestone trade at that place, which is also a distributing centre for the salt trade of the district. Paungbyin, on the Chindwin branch, will open up the higher valley of the Chindwin and be a depôt for rice and india-rubber in large quantities. All along the line are fertile paddy fields and fine forests, which ought to give a certain amount of freight, though it is not likely that the railway will ever be able to compete with the water for carrying timber on account of the great cost and heavy weight involved.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

ANGLO-ORIENTALISM.

UNDER the above heading the Civil and Military Gazette of Lahore has a curious article to prove that in the rapid Anglicising of our system of administration in India we are in some respects not going far enough, while in others we are going too far in abandoning Oriental manners and methods. "Intensely practical as we are," says the writer, "we forget that the Oriental, fast as he is following us to imitation, is, and long will be, accessible to considerations which with us go for little. We do not half realise what a potent lever in dealing with the inertness of the people around us is the power which the Government and its representatives possess of conferring distinction. To some extent, no doubt, this engine is used—in the matter, for instance, of titles and of extra guns for the great ones of the land. To some extent also it is misused, in the scattering broadcast by little considered departments of parchment certificates—such as those for educational services, or for aid in vaccination or sanitation. But what is not understood is the results which might be achieved by the executive officers if they had a freer hand in the matter of incurring a little occasional expense for jalsas and khilluts to mark the appreciation by Government of good work done by the notables of their districts." To illustrate the force of this argument a story is quoted of the late Sir Henry Lawrence having rewarded a land-holder in the Punjab who had rendered him some service. The man was required to carry through some measure which was distasteful to the people of his neighbourhood. He, however, did so, and Sir Henry, in the presence of his friends and the notables of the district assembled in durbar, presented him with a pair of gold bangles. Speaking of it long afterwards, the old man is reported to have said:—"Lawrence Sahib thoroughly understands us natives. What was the value of the bangles? Rs. 300 or Rs. 350, perhaps. I had spent more than that one way or another in bringing my neighbours round, not to speak of trouble and exertion and unpopularity at first incurred. But the bangles given to me in that way, the words which accompanied them, the izzat conferred on me in the face of the country-side, was worth 10,000 rupees to me. I was the Sirkar's bought bond slave from that time forth." This story may or may not be apochryphal, but we do not join in the moral which the teller of it draws in support of his own views. We do not think that the administration of India would be improved by district officers being empowered to distribute gold bangles at their discretion. The natives of India are very much inclined towards that form of gratitude which partakes of a sense of favours yet to come, and there is the experience of Lower Bengal to show that the indiscriminate bestowal of honours and titles in reward for lip service has wrought evil rather than good. We have educated the Bengalis to lean upon the Government, and we are now reaping the results of our foolishness. The college certificated Babus consider that the Government which has provided them with the learning of parrots should also provide posts for them as patriots. Otherwise the Government must take the risk and responsibility of seditious writings in the vernacular Press. For many years the system of jalsas and khilluts advocated by our Indian contemporary has been tried in Bengal, and to-day young Bengal is not only the most ungrateful, but the most disloyal of all India. Fortunately, the weakness of character, which makes him so susceptible of outward favours, and so cringing to gain them, renders him powerless to do any real harm to the State. He can speak daggers, but dare not use them. No one who has any experience of India would like to see the men of the North-West and of the Punjab become like the Bengalis of Calcutta and its neighbourhood. Reward merit by all means, but discourage in every way that abject looking up to Government for favours which is the characteristic of the Natives of Lower Bengal. Our contemporary, who wishes to see the system of khilluts more extended in the Punjab, gives a reason for his desire, which may not be altogether pleasing to those who hail from the North of the Tweed, however correct it may be. He says that the District Officers who might be entrusted with the distribution of the gold bangles "are most of them Scotchmen, and are, therefore, not likely to lay out sixpence without due return." This may be true; but even then we do not accept it as an argument in favour of the principle that District Officers should be encouraged to scatter presents amongst the Natives in the hope that Government will gain something in return for its cheap liberality. Government will be stronger and better supported by observing an independence of character, and encouraging it in its subjects, than in seeking aid and loyalty through indiscriminate gifts of patronage.

Messrs. George White and Co. report that the public sales of Indian Teas have been lighter, being 24,000 packages, against 32,000 packages last week. The market, partly due to the dull foggy weather, opened with a flat tone, and prices were irregular with a tendency in favour of buyers; there has, however, since been more general bidding, with a slight recovery, especially on good to finest Pekoes and Broken Pekoes. Common to medium Pekoes from 8d. to 1s. per lb. show unusually good value at the decline quoted last week. Strong liquoring Broken Pekoe Souchongs and common Broken Pekoes have been in request and are rather dearer.

Messrs. H. A. Hertz and Co.'s Fortnightly Ceylon and Java Te Report says:—Of Ceylon Tea supplies have remained on the same moderate scale, 7,590 packages having been offered during the fortnight. Quality has been well maintained, but some descriptions are rather more difficult of sale than they were a fortnight ago. Broken Pekoes and Orange Pekoes fine and finest sell readily at full prices. Broken Pekoes medium to good medium from 1s. 3d. to 1s. 6d. are somewhat irregular and easier for indifferent quality, but strong flavoury Teas are in active demand at fully previous prices. Pekoe, Pekoe Souchongs and Souchongs, with the exception of the lower grades at and under 1s., which remain steady, demand has slightly fallen off, and quotations are less regular; Pekoes, 1s. 1d. to 1s. 4d., are ½d. to 1d. per lb. lower. Java Tea: Only one sale has been held, comprising 877 packages of Teas from Tjimoenghal, Babalean, Simagar, and Tjiogreg Estates. The first-named showed improved quality and sold at steady prices. With a scarcity of export orders, Pekoe and Pekoe Souchongs sold rather cheaply; Souchongs at about former values. Broken Pekoes, however, were briskly competed for.

OBITUARY.

GENERAL H. LAWRENCE.—General Henry Lawrence, late of the Bengal Infantry, died on the 23rd inst. at Camden Gardens, Richmond, Surrey, at the age of 97 years. He entered the army in November, 1811, obtaining his captaincy in November, 1826, colonelcy in April, 1854, and his generalcy in May, 1874. General Lawrence served on board the Astell East Indiaman, and was in command of two guns on her quarter-deck in a severe action fought in the Mozambique Channel on July 3, 1810, between three Indiamen and two French frigates and a corvette. He also served in the operations against and attack of the fortress of Malown in the Nepaul wars of 1814-15, receiving the medal with clasp. General Lawrence served with the Reserve of the Grand Army during the Mahratta Campaign of 1817-19; and also against Coles in 1835, and was in command of a brigade of all arms employed against the same tribes in 1836-37.

COLONEL J. E. HUGHES.—Colonel John Edward Hughes, late Madras Army, died on the 18th inst. at Eisleben, Tavistock.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL A. R. SETON, R.E.—Lieutenant-Colonel Alexander Reginald Seton, R.E., Superintendent Engineer, Western Defences of India, died on the 12th inst. at Bombay, at the age of 47 years. He entered the Royal Engineers as a second lieutenant in December, 1857, obtaining his first lieutenancy in August, 1858, captaincy in November, 1869, majority in November, 1877, and his lieutenant-colonelcy in August, 1886.

CAPTAIN J. H. BURKE.—Captain John Hawley Burke, 2nd Battalion Prince of Wales's Own West Yorkshire Regiment, son of the late Rev. Michael Burke, of Ballydugan, county Galway, Ireland, died on the 24th ult. of pneumonia, at Rajanpur, India, at the age of 33 years. He obtained his lieutenancy in the Army in November, 1875, and his captaincy in June, 1885.

LIEUTENANT E. J. JENKINSON.—Lieutenant Edward John Jenkinson, of the 2nd Battalion West Yorkshire Regiment, son of Edward George Jenkinson, C.B., died of enteric fever, on the 22nd inst., at Deolali, India, aged 21 years. The young officer only obtained his lieutenancy in August, 1886.

IT has been decided that the two companies of the 1st Battalion King's Own Scottish Borderers at Fatehgarh are to rejoin regimental headquarters at Meerut in time to take part in the division manœuvres early in January, and be replaced, on the termination of the manœuvres, by two other companies of the same regiment, Fatehgarh being during the interim, left without British Infantry.

We (Army and Navy Gazette) are glad to learn that Major H. E. McCallum, Colonial Engineer to the Government of the Straits Settlements, has been at last successful in his efforts to wrest from the War Department a positive promise to supply adequate guns for the armament of Singapore. Some time ago it was arranged that several batteries should be erected for the protection of this important British possession, and the Colonial Government agreed to defray the cost of laying-out and erecting these batteries, whilst it was a distinct arrangement that they should be armed, when completed, at the expense of the Imperial Government. With this understanding, Major McCallum surveyed various suitable positions in Singapore, and £100,000 was actually spent in throwing up earthworks and constructing forts. But when they were completed, the question of armament remained to be considered. The War Department generously offered an assortment of the obsolete 7-in. Armstrong breech-loaders and "converted" 64-pounders which encumber the parapets of our fortified positions in the United Kingdom, from Cork Harbour to Harwich—the first of these having a muzzle velocity of 1,100 ft. per second only, and a penetrative power of 4·86 in. into iron at 1,000 yards, whilst the latter possess no penetrative power whatever; hence their defensive attributes against the attack of an iron-clad or protected cruiser would be about equal to that of a row of pea-shooters. The Colonial Engineer was, however, not to be imposed upon with such an inadequate offer, and come home to England to press his claims. It is needless to say that he met with considerable opposition, as the dread of Lord Randolph Churchill was then, like the sword of Damocles, suspended over Pall Mall. But, by dint of sheer pushing, he has gained his point, and is now leaving for Singapore well pleased with the concessions which have been granted to his importunity. It is understood that a proportion of the heavy armour-piercing muzzle-loading guns is to be despatched to the Straits Settlements, together with some 6-inch steel breech-loading weapons of the most recent pattern; also that the Colonial Government will provide itself with several batteries of quick-firing guns for sweeping approaches and enfilading. The principal forts have been erected for the protection of the docks for shipping, which are excellent, the wharves having deep water immediately alongside. When we say that that the value of the exports to and imports from the United Kingdom and Straits Settlements amounts to £7,000,000 per annum, the importance of these possessions may be fairly realised. The total sum of exports and imports from all places computes to £35,000,000. But, of course, a good deal of this is passing trade. Up to the present time the military defences of Singapore consisted of the wing of a European Regiment, and a small, old-fashioned redoubt, within which the principal object was the bungalow of the local ordnance store officer. Now, however, we trust that it may be in a position to offer serious resistance if attacked.

"Mentally and spiritually" writes a certain Surendranath Mookerjee in the National Magazine, "the average Bengalee is any day equal to a dozen John Bull. Centuries of worship with the unusual amount of spirituality in him has resulted in making him more and more mentally and spiritually powerful than physically." Which clearly explains, despite the apparent co-existence of mental and spiritual power with grammatical weakness, why England is so inferior to Bengal in all the achievements of literature, art, and science.

The Dismounting of the State Corps.—The Times of India, in the course of a leader on the late order by the Commander-in-Chief regarding officers in Native regiments in future discharging their duties on foot says:—It is scarcely necessary to point out that this measure, if carried out, will not increase the popularity of the Indian Army. The Government of India may find that it cannot obtain officers to serve on such terms and with reduced pay. As far as the officers now in the Staff Corps are concerned, nothing would suit their interest better than a general strike against service in the Staff Corps among young officers. Ever since the grievance of slow promotion has been felt, it has been the fervent prayer of all that probationers might run short. Then, indeed, might a captaincy in eight or nine years be hoped for. But, alas! the probationers poured in quicker than ever! But loss of pay and charger—that surely should deter them. To have to foot it for fifteen or twenty years in the sweltering heat on parade and on active service—surely that should take the gilt off the gingerbread! Sooner or later, too, they have to do orderly officer's duty. There is, indeed, every reason to believe that this order, which is now limited to parade work, is but the thin end of the wedge, and that before long only four officers per battalion (the commanding officer senior and junior major and adjutant) will be mounted. And why should it not be so? It is certainly true that four mounted officers are enough for ordinary purposes. But if service in the Indian Army is to be robbed of its chief attractions, "good pay and being mounted, is it to have nothing to replace its losses?"

COMPRISING PRACTICAL RULES FOR LEARNING THE LANGUAGE, VOCABULARY, DIALOGUE, LETTERS, AND IDIOMS, &c., IN ENGLISH AND ARABIC.

BY

Rev. ANTON TIEN, Ph.D., M.R.A.S.,

Hon. Curate of Holy Trinity, Milton-next-Gravesend; Medallist of the Roman University de Propaganda Fide; First Class Honour Man in Arabic, Syriac, and Hebrew; and Proxime Accessit in Classics. Formerly First Class Interpreter to the Allied Forces in the Crimea; K.C. of the Order of the Medjidie, &c., &c.; Author of the "Levant Interpreter" and the "Egyptian Handbook"; and Reviser of the Arabic Prayer Book, &c., &c.

"Dr. Tien's little book will be found a valuable guide to the traveller who wishes not so much to talk as to understand what he hears spoken and sees written in common Arabic. In the course of a hundred pages a clever summary is provided of Arabic grammar, which will be found sufficient for all ordinary purposes, and which may easily be made the subject of further instruction from the native teacher."—SATURDAY REVIEW.

"The most useful portion of the book consists of the dialogues, the idiomatic exercises, the vocabulary, and other additions of practical usefulness, such as lists of official titles, of tribal names, and information on the divisions of time, on weights and measures, currency, and commercial, legal, and political terms."—ATHENÆUM.

"The perusal of Dr. Tien's admirable work will be of the greatest value to officers and others under orders for the East."—MORNING POST.

"Will be found very useful by soldiers, officials, students, and merchants desirous of obtaining a certain degree of proficiency in the spoken language, which is becoming in these days of increasing importance."—DAILY NEWS.

"Dr. Tien's Manual can be confidently recommended as the most simple, practical, and trustworthy guide which has yet appeared."—OVERLAND MAIL.

"The rules and explanations are clear, terse, and t the point, and we cordially recommend his book to a who wish to acquire a conversational knowledge of Arabic."—TRUBNER'S RECORD.

"The book is of a handy and convenient size, and both author and publishers have rendered important service in placing it within reach of students."—INDIAN DAILY NEWS.

"The author of the volume before us has done goo service in compiling this Manual, in which the difficulties—and, it must be confessed, they are not a few—in mastering Arabic are reduced to a minimum."—BROAD ARROW.

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

'Th Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGIATE SCHOOL.

THE course of instruction is designed to PREPARE BOYS (Sons of Gentlemen, from 7 years of age) to occupy the positions of Land Owners and Occupiers, Land Agents, Surveyors, intending Colonists, &c. The education secured at this institution is of a very superior character, the whole object of the School being to impart a thoroughly practical and scientific knowledge of all agricultural subjects; a thorough moral, intellectual, and physical training, it pledges itself to send forth its pupils practically religious and sound scholars. The school is most pleasantly situated in a healthy locality. The greatest possible care is bestowed upon the health and domestic comfort of the pupils. The diet is excellent and unlimited. The school is very strongly recommended. References throughout Great Britain.—Address for prospectus the PRINCIPAL, Maypole Road, East Grinstead, Sussex.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

HERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

TESTIMONIALS.

From R. NORMAN SHAW, Architect to the Royal Academy:—

29, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C.,
February 19 1884.

The "Æolus" Waterspray Company have fixed two Air Extractors and one Air Warmer in the Life School of the Royal Academy of Arts with, we all think, the happiest results. Our troubles with that school have always been very great, as owing to the amount of gas consumed, and the necessity of keeping the school well heated on account of the Nude Models, its tendency has been to get unbearably hot, and when windows were attempted to be opened the draughts were most dangerous. It is now kept at a pleasant even temperature, and there are no draughts. The reason for this is not difficult to find. The very hot air from the steam-pipes, and the fumes from the gas, are carried off as fast as they are generated, and a continual stream of warm fresh air being supplied, the school is kept comfortable.

(Signed) R. NORMAN SHAW, R.A., Architect.

Dear Sir,—We have pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of your "Invisible Roof Ventilators," which we fixed in above church with admirable results.—We are, yours faithfully,

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Scene from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1887.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 18th November; from Allahabad and Madras to the 16th November; and from Calcutta to the 15th November.

ARRIVING at Karachi on Friday afternoon, Nov. 11th, the Viceroy had a very busy day on Saturday. In the forenoon he had to receive four deputations and listen to four separate addresses, setting forth the wants and desires of the various sections of the community. One favourite topic was the contumacy of the Public Works Department and the necessity of the Hyderabad-Pachpadra Railway. His Excellency's reply was extremely sympathetic and extremely guarded. As an individual he could not help feeling the force of the representations made him, but as Viceroy his freedom of action was restricted on the one hand by the fact that the Secretary of State only allowed a certain annual expenditure on Indian Railways, which was nearly all budgeted for lines already undertaken, and on the other hand by the the consideration that other parts of the Empire, in particular Upper Burma, were calling as loudly for increased railway communication as Karachi. On Monday his Excellency laid the foundation-stones of two new educational institutions.

THE HON. MR. SCOLE has arrived in Calcutta, and the work of the Government of India will be carried on by him and Sir Charles Aitchison, pending the arrival of the Viceroy and the rest of the Council. The Hon. Mr. Quinton has also reached Calcutta, and, until the opening of the Legislative Council, will be occupied with the affairs of the Public Service Commission, which meets immediately under the presidency of Sir Charles Aitchison.

VERY urgent private affairs have suddenly called home the Military Secretary to the Government of India, Col. Collen, who left by the Victoria on November 11.

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT was installed District Grand Master of Bombay Freemasons with great ceremony on Saturday, November 12.

THE Commander-in-Chief has thoroughly inspected the proposed lines of defence about Quetta, and witnessed a sham fight with a view to test the weak points of the position. Leaving Quetta for Karachi he was able to examine the state of the Bolan and the railway which traverses that Pass.

THE question of making Quetta the headquarters of a Military Division is under consideration.

A COUNTRY boat capsized at Calcutta on Sunday, Nov. 13, when a hundred Natives were drowned.

THE raid near Lakhimpur does not seem to have been of the serious kind that was first reported. The attack, made by Dufflas and not Abors, was on a village beyond the inner frontier line, and has no significance as regards British territory. No further trouble is apprehended.

MR. PAUL, Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling, has returned from his special mission to Sikkim.

THE Public Rooms at Kamptee were burned down on the night of Nov. 10, and damage done to the extent of at least Rs. 10,000. The fire was caused by the upsetting of a kerosine lamp during a dress-rehearsal in the theatre.

THOUGH the Indian Midland has now completed the section from Cawnpore to Jhansi it will be some little time before the line is opened for traffic. Probably, however, the new year will see a regular train service running.

MR. ALEXANDER MCHINCH, Chairman of the Karachi Chamber of Commerce, has been appointed Consular Agent for Belgium at Karachi.

MR. A. GOUGH, Principal of the Muir College, has been elected to the Registrarship of the Allahabad University.

MR. LEE-WARNER is confirmed in the post of Secretary to Government.

THE trial of the Morgan-Ross case is proceeding at Madras.

The troopship Serapis arrived in Bombay on Wednesday morning, Nov. 16.

THE report of the Bombay Extension Committee has been drawn up and submitted to Government.

THE first shipment of Batoum oil is now being discharged at Calcutta.

THE Government of India have sanctioned the recommendation that certain members of the family of the Nawab of Jhajjar should be allowed to reside anywhere they please, except in the Delhi Divisivn.

IT is stated that Mr. Grant, the Collector of Satara, will retire from Government service in January, and that Mr. Alfred Keyser, the present Acting Collector at Poona, will be appointed in his place.

THE visit of M. Pasteur's Agent to India will be turned to account by allowing as many Veterinary Officers as possible to attend the series of experiments which will be undertaken at Kahnpur.

NOTES.

THE news from India by telegram and mail is uneventful. Lord Dufferin's durbar on the frontier appears to have been a marked success, and it is satisfactory to learn that "Afghanistan continues quiet." The Amir having allowed an English dentist to visit and leave Cabul in safety has now borrowed a geologist from the Indian Government. Western civilisation progresses apace.

SURELY news from Simla must take an extraordinary length of time to reach Calcutta, as the Times corespondent only telegraphs to his journal yesterday the contents of a letter sent by the Countess of Dufferin to the Indian Press from the Viceregal Lodge, Simla, on October the 25th, and which letter in full appeared in the papers received by the Overland Mail last week. However, it is not too late to learn or to be gratified by the intelligence that subscriptions have been coming in liberally for the Fund which Lady Dufferin inaugurated for the benefit of the women of India "in whose welfare the Queen takes so great and personal an interest." Lady Dufferin writes that the list of donors and collectors is now being prepared for transmission to the Queen-Empress, and that this list, with the address forwarded to Her Majesty, will be published in the Report of the National Association in January, 1888.

HER ladyship's letter concludes thus:—"The Central Committee have now been enabled to invest the five lakhs which they were anxious to lay by as an Endowment Fund. The Branches are likewise endeavouring to invest money so as to insure the continuity of the work of the National Association. We trust, therefore, that although the next year affords no special occasion for liberality the progress already made in carrying out the objects of the Association, and the assurance of stability given to it by the possession of a certain, though a comparatively small income, will encourage all who are interested in the welfare of the women of India to make still further efforts on their behalf, and to give us the means of more quickly relieving their sufferings, and of supplying them with the medical aid which they so greatly need."

What is the meaning of the following mysterious paragraph culled from yesterday's Sunday Times :—

The head of the Intelligence Department at the India Office, Sir Owen Burne, is himself the soul of honour, as he is the pink of courtesy; but is he vigilant and suspicious enough for precisely that post? It may be doubted. That there are traitors in the office has long been certain. (Vide Preface to "Russia's next move towards India." Simpkin, Marshall and Co. 1886.) When M. Lessar was in London, two or three years ago, he proved, not only his familiarity with, but his possession of, copies of the most confidential and (as it was fondly supposed) most secret memoranda of the India Office regarding the routes leading from Candahar towards India. And it is the conviction of the highest authorities in India that the same base traffic, which then supplied the Russian agent with his information, is being pursued in the London India Office still.

SIR OWEN TUDOR BURNE is, as all who know him will gladly allow, the soul of honour and the pink of courtesy; but he does not happen to be the head of the Intelligence Department at the India Office. He is, as the Editor of the Sunday Times ought to know, a member of the Secretary of State's Council. But his successor in his old office of Political Secretary is also the soul of honour, and "vigilant and suspicious enough precisely for that post." So what does the paragraph mean? Who has stolen what?

ACCORDING to the Times telegram from Rangoon, dated yesterday, the following arrangements have been made in Upper Burma:—"The country north of Thayetmyo, adjoining the old frontier, has been placed in charge of Lieutenant Green and an Assistant-Commissioner, and Major-General Gordon has placed Colonel Clements, of the South Wales Borderers, with a strong party of mounted infantry, in military charge of the same district. On the other side of the river, at Allanmyoi, is posted Mr. Fraser, an Assistant-Commissioner possessing considerable police experience. He will be assisted by mounted infantry. It is added that both Mr. Fraser and Lieutenant Green will be given a free hand, and relieved from interference."

THE Burma Gazette has, of course, given great disappointment to many who expected to find that the recommendations from India would be followed up by a profuse distribution of honours and promotions at home. But, as a Service contemporary puts it, "the profusion of honours and decorations for little wars threatened to make us ridiculous, and a line had to be drawn somewhere." The Burma despatches, in which everybody holding a commissioned rank was mentioned, took the War Office by surprise. If everybody was to be decorated wherein would lie the honour of distinction?

THE Government of India, with the approval of the Secretary of State for India, have sanctioned the granting of furloughs to non-commissioned officers and men to England for six months, provided they have twelve years' service and are to be re-engaged to complete twenty-one years. Certain conditions are attached, among which we may mention that the soldier pays his own expenses to his home after landing at Portsmouth, and that the total numbers are limited to 300 a year.

THE Pioneer to hand by this mail says:—

There will be a good many changes in the personnel of the Viceroy's Council when it next meets in Calcutta for the purpose of making laws and regulations. The familiar faces of Sir Theodore Hope, Sir Auckland Colvin and Mr. Peile will be missed; their places being filled by Sir Charles Aitchison, Sir Charles Elliott and Mr. Westland. Sir Steuart Bayley will succeed Sir Rivers Thompson in the chair of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. In the ranks of the additional members there will also be some alterations. Mr. F. M. Halliday will, we believe, take the place of Sir W. Hunter, Sir Dinshaw Manockjee Petit succeeds Rao Saheb Viswanath Mandlik as representative of Bombay; and it is not improbable that our newest province will be invited to send a Burmese member in the place of Raja Amer Hasan Khan, whose term of office expires in December next.

The Hydro Therapeutic Establishment, Farnborough, Hants, for the cure of Chest and Throat Diseases, Rheumatism, Gout, &c., on the Pine System, now in vogue at Reichenhall, was formerly opened on Saturday by a dinner given to the medical profession and Press. As on a future occasion we shall refer more in detail to the Pine Treatment and the clinical advantages it offers to Anglo-Indians, it must suffice to say that this establishment is the first of the kind introduced into England for the cure and alleviation of diseases of the respiratory organs by means of terebinthinate products, which has of late years been a favourite method of treatment with many leading German physicians. A complete system of pine baths and inhalation rooms has been erected by the proprietor of the Hydro-Therapeutic Establishment, which is a perfect replica of the baths of Reichenhall. The pine baths and inhalations are guaranteed to be the purest and best of their kind, in that the Pumiline Pine Extracts and other products are distilled from the Pumilio Pine which grows on the higher Alps, close to the region of perpetual snow 6,000 or 7,000 feet above the sea level.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, Dec. 4.

According to the Viceroy's original programme, he was to have ridden through the Kohat Pass to Kohat last Monday. At the last moment his plans were changed, and he remained at Peshawur till Wednesday, going thence direct to Rawul Pindi. On Thursday he witnessed a sham fight, in which the whole garrison of Rawul Pindi was engaged. On Friday he visited the cavalry camp of exercise at Lawrenceport, and yesterday he arrived in Lahore.

During the stay of the Viceregal party at Rawul Pindi, Lady Dufferin issued a letter, thanking all who had helped in distributing the collection cards for the jubilee collection in connection with her Female Medical Aid Fund. The fact that a large sum was raised in small amounts by means of the cards is, she says, mainly attributable to the energy of those who took the trouble to point out the benefits of the scheme to the people. She observes that the work of the Association must needs be slow at first, but hopes that in time trained nurses may be established, and lying-in wards and dispensaries opened in every district. She adds that during the Viceroy's tour she has inspected the local hospitals at various places, and has visited and consulted the local officers regarding the best means of extending the operations of the Association.

The action of the Bengal of Commerce in moving the Government to procure such an alteration of the law as will admit of the Budget being submitted to and discussed in detail by the Legislative Council is, as was anticipated, receiving general support. The Calcutta Trades Association, the Anglo-Indian Defence Association, and the British-Indian Association, which represents the landholding community of Bengal, have intimated their concurrence, and the Bombay Chamber of Commerce has addressed the Government in similar terms. The last-named body points out that during the past decade an enlightened public opinion has grown up, which it must be to the interest of the Government to consult; and it describes the proposed reform as one advocated by the whole educated community. The journals are almost unanimous in urging the Government to adopt the suggestion, and there is little, if any, appearance of dissent.

The Session of the Bengal Legislative Council commenced yesterday. The Lieutenant-Governor, in his opening speech, said that the chief work before the Council was that of proceeding with the Calcutta Municipal Bill, introduced last year. It would be necessary to refer the measure again to a select committee, as during the recess a large number of suggestions had been received from the Supreme Government and various public bodies. He feared, therefore, it would be some time before the Bill could be passed, but every effort would be made to pass it during this Session. The only other Bill which he mentioned was one to enable the Government to exempt certain public buildings from the operation of the ordinary municipal law.

The Public Service Commission, which is now sitting in Calcutta, is understood to be occupied in considering the question of establishing an Imperial local service, proportionate shares of posts in each being reserved for Europeans and for Natives, the question of the liability of civil servants to be transferred from province to province, and the question of raising the limit of age in Civil Service Competitions. On the last point it is believed that the Commission is likely to recommend the raising of the maximum age to twenty-three.

The Englishman newspaper states that the high priest of Baidyanath, one of the most sacred shrines in Benal, has addressed a letter to the Viceroy on the subjects of infant marriage and widow remarriage. He opposes all reform, arguing that customs prescribed by the Hindoo scriptures or tradition are binding on the conscience of Hindoos, and therefore are not controllable by reason or expediency, and that to interfere in matters of conscience will agitate the people more than the Government is aware of.

Salar Jung has been obliged to leave Hyderabad, the reason assigned being that the experience of the fortnight which he has spent there shows it to be wise for him to withdraw from political circles till the present Minister becomes more popular and firmly settled. He will be allowed to reside at Aurungabad, 400 miles from the capital, where he has a family residence.

M. Notovich, the correspondent of the Novoe Vremya who visited India last summer, started some time from Cashmere for Ladakh, intending to return to Russia by way of Yarkand and Central Asia. He has now returned to India, having had a bad fall from his horse when nearing Leh, which obliged him to abandon the journey. He will take ship at Bombay for Europe.

A singular libel case, intimately connected with the politics of Nepaul, which has been pending before the district magistrate of Benares since August, has just been concluded. Two Nepaulese political refugees, General Ranbir Jung and Colonel Bhaggat Bahadoor, members of the family of the late Sir Jung Bahadoor, charged Pandit Amar Raj, domestic chaplain of the Maharajah, with defaming them by circulating a report that they had dined at hotels and elsewhere with a Brahmin named Homnath, who had been publicly excommunicated by the Nepaul Government. The defence was that Amar Raj, while temporarily residing in Benares in last July, received a letter from the Prime Minister, informing him that the complainants and others had been excommunicated by proclamation, and directing him to warn all Nepaulese subjects in Benares not to break bread with outcasts. Accordingly he called a meeting of the Nepaulese Brahmins in Benares and read the letter to them. He added that the power to excommunicate a subject of Nepaul rested exclusively with the Government of that country, and that the case had been brought against him out of revenge for the Minister's action. The case was delayed owing to the necessity of sending a commission to examine witnesses in Nepaul. On Thursday the magistrate gave judgment acquitting the accused, holding that he had acted as a servant obeying the orders of his superiors, and that no malice had been shown.

The Bengal Chamber of Commerce has addressed a memorial to the Government, urging the importance of opening negotiations with China respecting the carrying out of the provisions of Article 4 of the Convention of July 24th last, whereby China undertook to adopt measures for encouraging trade between Tibet and India. The Chamber points out that there appears to be no reason why the existing trade with Tibet should be chiefly deflected by the long route through Nepaul, and why a still larger direct trade should not spring up, except the obstructiveness of the monks, who hold the trade monopolies in Tibet, and the false representations made to his Government by the late Chinese Resident at Lhassa. They state that the Tibetan military post which was established last year within the frontiers of Sikkim and on the road from Darjeeling to the Jeylapla Pass is still allowed to remain there. They show that, in spite of difficulties, the trade between the two countries is developing, and they argue that if the restrictions and burdens which now impede but cannot prevent its development were removed, there would be an enormous expansion of it, as Tibet would eagerly welcome British goods, and could send unlimited quantities of fine wool in return. In this connection it may be mentioned that Tibetan wool is said to be now arriving more freely at Darjeeling, and that its quality and price are such as prove that a valuable trade is ready to hand. As the distance from Calcutta to Tibet by Darjeeling is only twenty-two days' journey, while the roundabout route through Nepaul, which the bulk of trade now follows, requires forty-five days, it is highly important that steps should be taken to open a direct route. The whole question of our relations with Sikkim is now before the Indian Government, and it is to be hoped that this matter of procuring trading facilities will receive due attention. Some of the Native newspapers appear to have become possessed of the idea that the Indian Government proposes to annex Sikkim. It is hardly necessary to state that it has no such intention.

THE HINDU IDEAL OF BEAUTY.—"The Native Thinker" says that, according to Hindu poetry, the following is the ideal of female beauty:—"Her face should be pleasing like the full moon; her complexion fair, her hair black, luxuriant and curly; her forehead capacious; her eyes large, black and glancing like those of the gazelle; her eyebrows arched like a bow; her lips tinged with red; her teeth regular and like a series of pearls; her bosom broad and rising; her waist slender like that of the lioness; her hands long and nails red; her skin smooth; and her speech gentle and agreeable. She should rather smile than laugh. Her movements should be rather bashful than lively."

RAILWAY SCHEMES IN THE PUNJAB.

(Pioneer.)

There has of late been mention made of various railway schemes for shortening the distance between the Punjab and the seaboard, but most of these involve so large an initial outlay that they are scarcely likely to be carried out to completion. The last put forward is to connect to Delhi with Hyderabad in Sind by way of the Bikanir Desert, a very direct route, no doubt; but one which for four fifths of its distance would traverse an uninhabited country, and consequently be dependent solely on through traffic. Such a line could not possibly pay, as the upper part of the Punjab is already tapped by the Indus Valley line, and there is, after all a limit to the export trade of the Province. A less pretentious scheme is now under consideration which seems likely to be well received. From Umballa due westwards there runs the Patiala State Railway (broad gauge) which is now in course of extension to Batinda on the Ferozepore-Rewari narrow gauge line. It is proposed to survey the 200 miles which lie between Batinda and Bhawalpur, on the Indus Valley line, with a view to linking these two points together. This would not only effect a considerable saving in the carriage of wheat and other exports from the districts south of Ferozepore, but would develop an improving country along the left bank of the Sutlej where there is much cultivation by means of irrigation. Moreover, from a military point of view, it would give an alternative line of rail to the great system which runs parallel with the Indus and has off-shoots to Peshin in the one direction, and the Sind-Sagar Doab on the other. It would link Umballa by means of the broad gauge with Rhawalpur direct, and the advantages of this in case troops had to be massed suddenly in Peshin cannot be over-estimated. The making of the Umballa-Kalka railway can only be a matter of time, and the great reserve of British troops cantoned in the hills between Kalka and Simla would thus be always able to move quickly towards the frontier. The distance from Umballa to Bhawalpore via Patiala and Batinda is only about 320 miles, which could be run by rail in the 24 hours. The desirability of having a line south of the Sutlej has long been recognised, and as the country to be traversed presents no physical difficulties, and as no great rivers have to be bridged, the work would be easy of accomplishment. This scheme is far more worthy of consideration than the more ambitious ones which have been put forward; the outlay is not prohibitive, and the immence strategic advantages it would give make it one which can scarcely fail to be acceptable in the eyes of the Government of India. The survey will probably be carried out during the ensuing cold weather, and when the estimates have been given a fair consideration of the case on its merits should certainly be accorded.

AN ALLEGORY.

The Sind Gazette is responsible for the following reprehensible "skit":—

St. Peter sat near the gate of Heaven and by him sat the devil. Below was a vast multitude waiting to be judged.

"I'm afraid I cannot let them all in," said St. Peter, with a sigh.

"Want of room?" asked the devil.

"No," replied St. Peter with a blush, whereat he addressed smiled, "but it seems scarcely fair to you to take all."

"It is rather late," said the devil, darkly, "to begin to consider what is fair to me; still, just for once, I don't mind letting you have 'em all. But it must not form a precedent. And, too, there's one little condition you must accept."

"You are too good," cried St. Peter, "at least you would be, you know, if——"

"I object to 'ifs,'" said the devil, darkly, "do you accept?"

"The condition?"

"A very simple one. They must come in of their own free will, and one of them must pass the gate in twenty-four hours from now. If now, I take 'em all."

"Accept?" almost shouted the philanthropic St. Peter, crying for joy, "of course I accept."

One great shout of delight, of relief from gnawing anxiety went up from the vast multitude when they heard the agreement, and St. Peter, gathering up his skirts, ran back to his gate lest he should be late for the first comer. The devil simply grinned and lighted a long Trichy, as though expecting there would be some delay.

One minute, fifteen minutes, an hour passed and still no one came. St. Peter began to get anxious. He left the gate and rejoined the devil. Looking down on the multitude he saw that furious discussion was going on in which everyone, man, woman and child, was engaged.

"What are those great red books they read so anxiously? And what are those great blue books they read so anxiously? And what are those long white papers and parchments, so strangely written over that they read so anxiously and guard so jealously?"

Digitized by Google

The devil frowned to conceal a grin. "How should I know?" said he. St. Peter sighed and went slowly back to his gate. "One must come in time," said he, piteously, to himself.

Five hours passed, ten, fifteen, twenty and still the devil smoked. St. Peter waited and the gate remained closed. At last in unbearable anxiety—for but half an hour remained—St Peter again left the gate and rejoined the devil. The noise that arose from the multitude was greater than ever, and now the air was full of the blue and red books and papers, used furiously as missiles.

"Do let me speak to them, do let me tell them just once, they've only ten minutes left," prayed St. Peter, tearfully. "Not a word," said the devil; "stick to your agreement."

"What does it all mean?"

As St. Peter spoke there was the sound of all the clocks of the world striking the hour.

"Shall I tell you?" asked the devil. St. Peter raised his tear-stained face, and the devil hissed in his ear.

"They could not settle the question of precedence." St. Peter rose in a furious passion, his words choking him. "At such a moment! The last supreme moment! Let them all go to——"

"Precisely," said the devil, with a sneer.

"That's just where they must go if our agreement's carried out. But I must put a limit somewhere, and, really, I'm afraid they're too mean even for my place. So they must go to the next hottest—back whence they came."

THE WILD BIRDS PROTECTION BILL.

(Times of India.)

The Bill that has just passed through the Supreme Legislative Council for the protection of game and wild birds is a measure that will meet with universal commendation. It has come not a day too soon. The old order of things, if persisted in, would have cleared whole districts, not merely of game birds, but of other varieties unfortunate enough to possess lovely plumage. The facts that have come to light regarding the wholesale slaughter that has been going on are almost incredible. For example, the Commissioner in Sind has reported that in a few days' time no fewer than 30,000 black partridges have been killed in certain parts of the provinces to supply the European demand for their skins. The wholesale dealers in feathers have thus been responsible for a terrible amount of damage, roilers (blue jays), golden orioles (mangoe birds), hoopoes, and other beautifully plumaged birds, all being bought up by them in any number. During the breeding season the devastation has been terrible, the gunners and trappers going forth and ruthlessly killing the cocks for the sake of their feathers, while they have not scrupled to live on the hens and the young, even the eggs being made an article of diet. Paddy birds, flycatchers, and other insect-destroying birds suffered especially, so that no small amount of harm was being wrought to the cultivators of the soil. The Bill was originally introduced to protect during the breeding season game birds proper; but from the facts we have given above it will be seen that it has been most wise and necessary to bring all wild birds within its scope. The measure will be free from all harshness in its working. It has none of the odium attaching to Game Laws, as the phrase is understood in England, laws having for their object the protection of private property in game. Sportsmen will not be interfered with, and we shall have no poaching cases before our courts. Municipal and cantonment authorities will simply be empowered to appoint a close time, during which penalties will be attached to the possession or sale of the birds specified in the Act. It will be observed that the new law is merely permissive, as there will be no need to apply it to districts where the destruction of birds is not carried on to any great extent. In places, however, where the slaughter is wanton, we trust that the Act will be at once brought into operation and rigorously enforced.

TAXATION IN UPPER BURMA.

(Mandalay Herald.)

The Local Government of Burma is aware of the fact that the people of this province were never at any time called upon to pay any tax upon their income or earnings in any shape whatever, except in a way which was well understood and cheerfully submitted to by them. There were two kinds of taxation, one of which was a poll tax, and the other was the land revenue, a tax on garden and cultivable land. It is well-known that the last two kings, though they kept a standing army did not pay for its maintenance, but expected their subjects to support it—those of their subjects, we mean, who were not fighting men. The system was as follows. It was a system like that of the conscription in France, by which every fifth man in Upper Burma, capable of bearing arms, was compelled to be a soldier. A group of five houses in the villages and towns furnished a man, who was bound to serve the king as a soldier, whose maintenance had to be provided for by the members of the five households who had sent him in the king's order. It was quite understood by the soldiers that they were not to expect any salary, but each had a plot of ground given to him at a nominal rent of two rupees a month, which he cultivated, and the produce of which was at his absolute disposal. The revenue thus collected went to the king's coffers and was utilised by him entirely, as he considered it in the light of his own perquisite. This tax was paid by the soldiers direct to the king. The other tax, which was the land tax, was of course the only impost on the income derived from the cultivation of the land, by the non-combatants among the inhabitants, who formed the majority of the people. The collection even of the land tax, like every other thing from which money could be drawn by fair or foul means, was farmed out to one man and formed one of the numerous royal monopolies. The farmer was usually a member of the royal household, a high-placed official, or Myook, or subordinate revenue officer. This land revenue was collected from the inhabitants of a single village, or groups of villages called townships, and a farmer often undertook to collect the revenue of a district or portion of a district. Beyond these, there was no sort of direct taxation. For instance, there was no municipal assessment, no ground or quit rent, no tax upon arts, professions, trades and callings, and no octroi on ordinary articles of consumption, and there was no tax on the monthly income which a man earned, or the salary he drew every month.

THE BENGAL POLICE REPORT.

(Indian Daily News.)

The Bengal police tortured fewer people in 1886 than they did in 1885, or at least there were fewer cases brought to the test of investigation. Indeed, the Government's review of the Police Report for the year declares that there were no cases of torture. "There were four cases of beating, or ill-treatment, by the police, but none were, strictly speaking, cases of torture." The "beating or ill-treatment" was sufficiently severe in one instance to secure for the inflictors, three in number, a sentence of transportation for life; but possibly "torture" is only used officially to describe cases where the ill-treatment assumes a more gross character, and thumb-screws, hot irons, or other implements, such as were used in the days of the Holy Inquisition, are brought into service. It seems to have been urged before a Sessions Judge, on behalf of the accused policemen, that "when there were repeated thefts in a locality the public opinion of the place demanded that the bad characters of the neighbourhood should be intimidated," and in his decision the Sessions Judge remarked:—"There is some practical common sense in these views, and I am prepared to say that, having regard to the actual condition of this country, the Courts should not be disposed to look with too curious eyes on every small excess committed by an investigating officer of police." There are legal means provided for punishing bad characters when they misbehave, and it is not advisable that any punitive power should be delegated to police officers. The Lieutenant-Governor takes a more correct view of the position when he says:—"The provisions of the Penal Code may, in point of severity, be in advance of public opinion; but morality has a tendency to follow, however slowly, in the wake of legislation, and if public opinion sympathises with the beating of thieves and rough treatment of known bad characters, it should be the endeavour of Government officers to educate and raise it to a higher level." Police zoolum in Bengal should certainly find neither encouragement nor approval at the hands of the Inspector-General of Police or of Session Judges.

THE SHORT SERVICE SYSTEM.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Once more the trooping season has come round, and the hearts of officers serving in this country are saddened by the spectacle of large batches of young men leaving the service, the majority with one good-conduct badge, many with two. At the same time the commanding officers of home battalions are driven almost out of their senses by the ceaseless drain of drafts for foreign service. Men do "take" on it is true, but only in small numbers; and yet when one inquires of time-expired men why they are leaving the service, they have no very sound reason to give. Few will say that they are tired of soldiering, and scarcely one but will honestly declare that he is sorry to go; and not one in fifty has any certain employment to take to on transfer to the reserve. The fact is that they want to have a few months at home again; and when one thinks of the very poor time which the ordinary Tommy spends in India it is small wonder that he should wish to go home. Five or six years is a long time to get through in the plains of India, and few men care to prolong it when the chance comes of joining the army of the time-expired. Many men go home avowedly with the intention of re-enlisting for colour service should they find congenial occupation more difficult of attainment than their fancy had painted it; and few are able to do so when that delusive fortune, deferred pay, has taken unto itself wings and vanished away. We are of opinion that Indian service, with a run home, would be most popular with the rank and file, as it is among the officers of the British Army; and that should the dream of a long service army for India ever be fulfilled, it will be done by enlisting men for short periods, with increased facilities for re-engagement on arrival in England from foreign service.

THE TRAINING OF NATIVE PRINCES.

(Mahratta.)

Our Princes according to the new ways of thinking are always reared in solitude away from the turmoil of the world in the sweet retirement of Rajkumar Colleges. In taking care to shield the young Prince from the oftentimes pernicious influence of the Zenana, he is so effectually guarded that he very rarely gets an idea of what responsibilities he will have to bear, of what high authority he will be possessed, and how judicious and kind he must be in his dealing with the people. Indeed if we consider the way in which these Highnesses are brought up, we are struck with the remarkable fact that the exclusive education to which they are treated, is likely to make them quite unfit for the responsible and delicate task of ruling over their subjects. They become fine gentlemen; they learn to appreciate manly sports such as cricket, racing or any other of the like nature; they are well taught how to spend money like Princes. On occasions they can make speeches; they might be asked to preside at public meetings; they know how to figure well in subscription lists. But beyond this mere ornamental part of life's business they are fit for nothing. It is in the school of practical administration that they must be initiated. If they were taught their high duties so potential of either good or mischief, by being made to associate with responsible officials, they would turn out model Princes. Something like what we propose was tried in the case of the Gaikwar, and all accounts speak of him as an exemplary ruler. If the Princes, the most noble of them, were asked to sit with the Judges of the High Court for a term or two, with the Legislative Councillors for a similiar period, then, in their own States, to work in the different branches of the administration under the guidance of the responsible officials in charge of them, we should not be surprised to see them become efficient rulers. We do not mean to say that nothing like this is attempted at present. We are aware that before the Princes are given full powers of administration, a certain noviciate is obligatory upon them. But those who are acquainted with these things will certainly understand why we are not disposed to attach much or any importance to it.

THE STATE OF SIKKIM.

A correspondent writes to the Englishman from Darjiling:—

The Deputy-Commissioner, Mr. Paul, has proceeded with a strong escort of police into Sikkim, and the Executive Engineer, Mr. White, has followed under orders sent back by Mr. Paul, for the purpose of improving and making the road to the Jelap Pass fit for the passage of the Mule Battery and troops. It is said that the battery has orders to be ready to move at a moment's notice, and that five Companies of Infantry have like oders at the Presidency, and it is not, therefore, improbable that the Tibetan force in Sikkim may find itself rudely disturbed some fine morning.

Your readers will remember that the Tibetans, or rather their ignorant Llama leaders, took exception to the Macaulay Mission; and while it was dawdling for months at Darjiling waiting orders to advance from the Government of India or the Government at Home, they sent a force of some 400 or 500 men across the pass, and established it in a Fort or block house in Sikkim with the avowed purpose of opposing the passage of the Mission into Tibet. To the astonishment of the Tibetans as much as to ours, the Mission was withdrawn. The Tibetans were jubilant, and absolutely believed, and still believe, that they frightened us. They looked on us as shivering cowards, and what they heard of our power and might as mere fairy tales. Since then they have pretty well done as they liked in Sikkim, and now regard themselves, and act, as masters of that country. They detained the Raja in their own country, when he was on a visit at the time of the Mission, and ursurped his rights in Sikkim. They stopped all trade between Darjiling and Tibet, to the ruin of their own as well as ours. Bitter complaints and cries for help have come to us from the people of Sikkim. Letters and messages have been sent, and political dodges of various sorts have been resorted to by us to try and change this state of things, but in vain. Even threats have, I believe, been employed with the same and even worse result, Tibetans not only laughed at us, but have recently strengthened their force and position in Sikkim.

Mr. Paul has now it is said, been deputed to settle things one way or other once for all. That is, he is to get them out of Sikkim quietly, if possible, or vi et armis if necessary, and a better man for work could hardly have been chosen. He is well known to and liked by the Tibetan traders who come here, and his reputation for consideration and amiable courtesy has travelled to Lhassa. If they can be brought to reason he is the man to do it, but if, on the other hand, they have to be kicked over the frontiers, his kick will be vigorous and determined. They have already given way so far as to allow the Raja of Sikkim to visit his country, and to have an interview with Mr. Paul at Tambourgh, but this interview has not yet taken place.

Doubtless they think they have the Raja sufficiently under their thumbs to make the interview of little danger to their interest, but they forget that he has been living from hand to mouth with them, as they gave him nothing more than his food. We have stopped his subsidy of Rs. 12,000 per annum, and the jingle of the two or three years' allowance due to him, which Mr. Paul has in a big bag, is likely to be too much for their thumbs. The belief is that they have allowed the interview in the hope of getting a hold of this money. Anyway, I think there will be a row, because they believe we are cowards and can do nothing more than bounce. Had Macaulay's Mission advanced while the Tibetans had some respect for us, the force at the Jelap would have melted before it, but now that they despise and regard us as mere bullies that force will make a stand and fight a little, and many of the poor fools will go down, unless, like the old Raja of Sikkim, when we entered his country in 1860, they faint away at the sound of the guns.

BENGAL.

THE number of deaths from cholera registered in Bengal last year was 118,368, or at the rate of 1·78 per 1,000 of the population, against 173,767, or a ratio of 2·62 in 1885. Some of the deaths occurred in 21,567 villages, or 9·33 per cent. of the total number of villages in the province, whereas in the previous years 29,239 villages were attacked.

THE Bengal Board of Revenue has decided that khansamas of dak bungalows must take out a retail license to authorise them to retail imported spirituous and fermented liquors, but these licenses will be granted free of charge for sales on the premises to bona fide travellers using the dak bungalows.

A CORRESPONDENT from Jorehat, in Assam, writes to an up-country paper:—"Mr. Reuben, the optician, while travelling between Nowgong and Jorehat, distinguished himself in an affray with a bear. While on the march one of his servants, who was in advance, was heard to cry for help in a tone indicating immense pain, and Mr. Reuben rushed forward to see what was the matter. He found the man struggling with a large black bear, which had the servant's arm in its mouth. The only weapon Mr. Reuben had was a dagger, with which he at once fell upon the beast and completely disembowled him, subsequently carrying off the skin, which was a very fine one, as a trophy of his prowess. The servant's arm was badly mauled, and Mr. Reuben has sent him in here for treatment. While on this subject, I may mention that a tea-planter, a Mr. Henderson, has recently shot a tiger which measured 9 feet 6 inches.

MADRAS.

UPON the recommendation of Colonel Pennycuick, R.E., the officer in charge of the Peryaur Project, the Government has been pleased to sanction a hill allowance of one-third salary to all employés engaged in these gigantic irrigation works, in consideration of the high rate of living and the hardships the men ar put to by a residence at the site of the works.

IN connection with a plan for improving the system of storm warnings, three new meteorological stations are to be opened on the Coromandel coast at Bimlipatam, Nellore, and Cuddalore, and one on the Burma coast, probably at Tavoy. Mr. Elliot, Superintendent of the Bengal Meteorological Deparment, goes on an inspection tour to visit the coast stations shortly, and will select sites for the new observatories.

FOR some years the cost of the diet of the prisoners in the Madras jails has been much higher than in any other part of India, and the Finance Committee recorded a resolution that this was "almost a temptation to crime." The local Government appears now to have awoke to the necesity for a reduction of expenditure in this direction, and has issued instructions for revised scales of diet, one for doing hard labour and the other for those performing light or sedentary labour. These new scales are to be tried experimentally for one year under the careful supervision of the Inspector-General and Superintendents of Jails, who are to furnish careful reports to the Government.

MR. H. E. STOKES, has been confirmed in the appointment of Chief Secretary to Government, a post he has been filling since the departure of Mr. Forster Webster last December. The appointment is to have effect from the 30th ultimo, the date of Mr. Forster Webster's retirement. In the same Gazette we notice that Mr. J. F. Price has been confirmed in his appointment as Secretary to Government in the Revenue Department; that Mr. J. Lee-Warner has been appointed Collector and Magistrate of Chingleput; that Mr. E. C. Johnson has been transferred from Chingleput to Tinnevelly; and that Mr. Murray Hammick has been appointed Secretary to the Commissioners of Land Revenue.

BOMBAY.

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, on the occasion of his installation as District Grand Master of Bombay and its territories, paid Rs. 250 to the District Grand Lodge Fund for the benefit of poor and distressed masons.

IT is a fact worthy of notice that on the last day of the High Court on its Original Side sat there was not a single case in arrear that could have been brought to a hearing if the parties wished it. With the exception of cases which had been postponed or in which the parties were not ready, every case was put down on the day's board

THE High Court reopened on Monday, November 14, after the autumn vacation. The Hon. Mr. Justice Bayley, acting Chief Justice, presided in the First Division Court on the Original Side; and the Hon. Mr. Justice Scott, who returned to Bombay at the beginning of the month, presided in the Second Court. The Hon. Mr. Justice Farran, who acted for Mr. Justice Scott, has reverted to the office of Advocate-General. On the Appellate Side the Hon. Mr. Justice Nanabhai Haridas and the Hon. Mr. Justice Birdwood sat in the First Division Court. The Second Division Court will sit on a successor being appointed to the Hon. Mr. Justice West.

A Government Gazette Extraordinary has been published containing the following notification:—A vacancy having occurred in the Executive Council of this Presidency by the retirement of the Honourable James Braithwaite Peile, C.S., M.A., C.S.I., the Honourable Raymond West, C.S., M.A., F.R.G.S., Honorary LL.D. (Edin.), Honorary LL.D. (Queen's University, Ireland), Barrister-at-Law, who has been appointed by Her Majesty the Queen and Empress of India to be a member of Council at Bombay, has taken his seat as a Member of this Government.

A GANG of about fifteen labourers working at tunnel No. 12 of the Marmagoa Railway line in British territory, armed with swords and other weapons, attacked another party working at Sonaulim, on the 23rd ult. Four persons are reported to have been seriously wounded. Before the police, who were some fifteen miles away, could appear on the scene, the attacking party had taken to their heels The motive of the attack is supposed to be robbery, as the workmen had received their pay the previous day. Some men of the gang who had been serving on the Portuguese line previously have been recognised and arrested. The matter is in the hands of the authorities.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

THE Aillance Bank of Simla open a Branch of their Bank almost immediately at Cawnpore. Mr. Ker, the present officiating Manager of the Bank, will himself start the new Branch, and will continue to work it for the first two or three months of its existence. After that period it will become the charge of one of the senior Agents. This is a further and fresh sign of the continuing healthiness and growing popularity of this very excellently managed institution.

THE question of the cultivation of the date-palm in the Punjab appears to be, like everything else, governed by the question of funds. Something, however, will, the Lahore paper understands, shortly be done, as seed of the date-palm can be obtained in abundance from the Botanical Gardens, Saharunpar, and, it adds, under the head of scientific and minor departments, there is a small provision in the Provincial Budget of Rs. 4,000, part of which can be legitimately devoted to date-palm cultivation.

NATIVE PRINCES TRAVELLING.—The Kaiser-i-Hind gives a lecture to Native Princes on the advantages of travelling, and urges that every one of these Princes should, before they have entered upon the responsible duties of administering their States, go to England and study its civilisation by personal experience and observation, so that they can understand the wants of their own subjects and know in what way their welfare can best be promoted. They ought to publish the experiences of their travels for the benefit of their people, and encourage them to go to Europe and acquire useful arts. Rather than spend the money of their people in vain pomps and shows, they will learn to employ it in carrying out beneficent reforms, such as the laying out of roads, the construction of irrigation works, and the establishment of schools, dispensaries and hospitals. The paper expects much good to arise from the travels of princes like the Gaekwar, the Rao of Cutch and the Thakore Saheb of Gondal.

MURDER AT SIMLA.—The Simla correspondent of the Bombay Gazette telegraphs on the 30th ultimo:—"Last night a murder was discovered to have been committed on the 15th instant in a house close to the Mall, the most central part of Simla. A hill woman, named Murthoo, a convert to Mahomedanism, who had led a gay life and possessed a large amount of jewellery, was the victim. It appears that she was last seen going to her house in company with three men, apparently Punjabis. On Friday the attention of the police was attracted by a smell of putrefaction emanating from the woman's house. They broke open the door, and found inside the unfortunate victim dead, with her throat cut, and bearing evidences of a severe struggle. The first wound had apparently been inflicted whilst the woman was lying on her bed. Being of a powerful constitution she had succeeded in struggling into an outer room, the door of which was chained. It is supposed she was then despatched with a table knife. The room had been ransacked and the jewellery taken away. The police are in hopes that some clue to the murderers will soon be obtained, as they must bear marks of the struggle. They also expect to be able to trace them by the stolen property."

THE MURDERS OF A YEAR IN BENGAL.

The following is a summary of the principal murders committed in Bengal during the past year:—

In Nuddea, as a result of a drunken squabble about a prostitute, a man was severely beaten, and then placed on the railway line, where a passing train cut off one of his feet. A ryot in arrears with his rent cut down and killed the zemindar's peon, who had come to take him before the zemindar. A boy of twelve or thirteen was charged with strangling a little girl of seven, who had threatened to report him for indecently assaulting her. As regards this case the Inspector-General states that the boy was acquitted, although he confessed his guilt, and produced the child's ornaments. The District Magistrate will be asked to report why no application was made for an appeal on behalf of Government. A creditor assisted his debtor to murder the latter's brother-in-law, as it was intended that the murdered man's wife should be given in satisfaction of the debt. In Julpaiguri a woman was accused of having poisoned her husband. The Commissioner states that she fully confessed her crime, and her statements were borne out by her neighbours, but she was acquitted by the Sessions Court. This case also was not reported to Government. In two cases women poisoned their husbands at the instigation of their paramours. In Rungpore a young girl poisoned her husband at the instigation of her brother-in-law. In Dinagepore a man who had cut down a tree belonging to his zemindar, and knew the zemindar's gomasta was about to proceed against him, locked the latter inside his master's cutcherry, and then set fire to it. Two men beat a married woman to death, as they suspected her of having corrupted their wives. In Decca a zemindar's naib was murdered by discontented ryots. A village mukhtar was murdered by some lattials he was engaged in prosecuting for rioting. In Furreedpore, the head man of a faction was murdered by the opposite faction for giving adverse evidence in a case between them. In Tipperah a loose character was beaten and burnt to death. There were ten murders reported in the Chittagong Division, and in only one was a conviction obtained. In Patna an old man was poisoned by his servant at the instigation of his opponent in some civil suits. In Sarun a woman was poisoned by her paramour, who had reason to suspect her fidelity. In Chumparun a woman was poisoned by her husband to clear the way for an intrigue he had with his brother's widow. In Sarun the murder of Chuni Lall, a well-known Chuprah banker, by a hired Rajput ruffian named Moti Singh, attracted much attention at the time. In Durbhanga a zemindar's gomasta was murdered, and his body mutilated by the neighbours of a girl he had seduced. In Monghyr a woman, whose husband was away, had her throat cut by five men who were offended with her for rejecting their advances. In Singbhoom a husband hired an assassin to kill a man who had an intrigue with his wife. In another case a procuress was murdered while asleep. These and other cases clearly demonstrate the necessity for taking some steps with a view to bring about better results than those attained during the year under report.

THE LATE KING OF OUDH'S AFFAIRS.

The King of Oudh's affairs are being rapidly settled. There were no fewer than four thousand men on the roll of the King's servants, besides about one thousand more in the service of members of his Majesty's family. Many of these men had their families with them, while a bazaar had grown up on the King's estate containing an aggregate population of relations, friends, retainers, followers and shopkeepers, amounting to ten thousand persons. This little town will probably be broken up as the result of the King's death, and the five thousand men who were enrolled servants claim pecuniary recognition at the hands of Government. On November 1st Colonel Prideaux issued a notice, through the chief manager, offering gratuities in satisfaction of all claims to as many of the late King's servants as would return to their homes at Lucknow or elsewhere. The gratuities are devised on a liberal scale. The men who have been in service under six months are granted the amount of one month's pay; those who have been over six months and under three years will receive two months' pay. The third class, whose term of service range from three years to fifteen years, get three months' pay. Those who have more than fifteen years' service are assured of special recognition in the shape of pensions or enhanced gratuities. In every case one month's pay will be paid here, while the men entitled to more will receive the balance on arrival at their homes. In addition to these awards all the servants alike are to receive a free passage home, their height, complexion, and personal marks being noted as a precaution against the transfer of railway tickets. These liberal terms would probably be accepted very largely by the people were it not, says the Englishman, for two grievances. Those of the men whose families are here grudge the cost of taking them up-country, while the owners of some five hundred huts which constitute the bazaar feel loath to relinquish their property and go off to seek new huts in their old homes. If Government would authorise Colonel Prideaux to provide about two thousand additional free passages and buy up the huts the crowd would depart with many blessings on their paternal benefactors. The whole additional cost would not exceed fifteen thousand rupees. Another set of claims not less difficult to investigate and decide upon are those of the King's creditors. These are fabulous as they are presented and will amount to lakhs of rupees after a most ruthless cutting down.

THE CHIEF COMMISSIONERSHIP OF ASSAM.

Mr. D. Fitzpatrick took over the Chief Commissionership of Assam from Mr. Ward at Gauhati on Oct. 31. He reached Shillong the following day. Referring to the retirement of Mr. Ward the Allahabad paper writes:—

Assam has lost in Mr. Ward one of the most popular Chief Commissioners who ever swayed the destinies of that comparatively unknown province of the Indian Empire. Appointed first to officiate for Mr. (now Sir Charles) Elliott in 1883, Mr. Ward held the post for three months, during the absence of the permanent incumbent in England. Early in 1885 he was recalled from Rangoon to act again for Sir Charles Elliott, and when the latter finally expressed his intention this year of not returning to Assam, it was confidently hoped in many quarters that Mr. Ward would remain permanently in the province with which he had become so closely identified. But there were other claims too strong to be set aside, and circumstances over which even the omnipotent Government of India has no control, rendered it necessary to oust the Civilian who had officiated now continuously for more than twenty-two years. Mr. Ward lived to see, during his tenure of office, the realisation of his dream for the codification of the Revenue Law of Assam. In 1879 he submitted as Commissioner of the Assam Valley Districts his note on the Revenue System of the Province. In November, 1881, the first draft of the Land Revenue Regulation was submitted to the Government of India, and on July 1, 1886, this Regulation became law for Assam. Practically the whole of the work connected with this Act, from its inception in 1879 to the preparation of the final form it assumed during the Christmas of 1885, was done by Mr. Ward, and but for the unexpected necessity of his departure last month it is probable that the numerous rules which its provisions require would have been all fashioned by the hand which drew up the Regulation itself. Socially Mr. and Mrs. Ward carry with them the good wishes, affection, and esteem of a large and numerous circle of acquaintances, and but for Mr. Ward's known dislike to public displays he would not have been allowed to leave Shillong without some special mark of the high opinion in which he was held. As it was, all that could be done was for the whole community of the station to assemble at the Residency to wish Mr. Ward and his wife a regretful farewell.

Miscellaneous.

THE Queen received at Windsor Castle, on Saturday, the Gaikwar of Baroda, who had been summoned to the palace for the purpose of being invested by Her Majesty. The Gaikwar and the Maharanee travelled from London by special Great Western train, by which Viscount Cross (Secretary of State for India) and Viscountess Cross also proceeded to Windsor, where the distinguished visitors arrived shortly before two o'clock. In deference to a Native custom no males, with the exception of the officials on duty, were permitted to remain upon the platform during the arrival of the Indian Princess, who studiously avoided the gaze of those around, walked between two ladies from the saloon to the Royal carriage, which had been sent from the Castle for her conveyance. This was closed, and was preceded to the palace by an open laudau, containing the Gaikwar and his attendants, who were attired in rich oriental costumes. The Indian visitors and Viscount and Viscountess Cross lunched at the Castle. Later in the afternoon the Gaikwar and Viscountess Cross went for a drive in the Great Park, returning at the close of their excursion to the Castle. The Queen gave an audience shortly after six o'clock in the evening to the Gaikwar of Baroda, and, in the presence of the Court, invested him with the Grand Commandership of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India. A guard of honour of the Scots Guards was mounted in the quadrangle, and the band played the National Anthem. The Gaikwar and the Maharanee left the Castle after the investiture for the metropolis. Viscount and Viscountess Cross remained the guests of the Queen.

THE session of the Legislative Council, which has just come to an end at Simla, has been characterised by a good deal of solid useful work. The pièces de résistance were, of course, the Land Revenue and Tenancy Acts for the Punjab; but there has been other legislation of almost equal importance. A code of regulations has been passed for the Indian Marine Service; and the organisation of the Military Police in Burma has been placed upon a legal basis. The Act for the establishment of a University at Allahabad was a welcome concession to the educational demands of these Provinces. A defect in the Customs law has been remedied by the Act for the establishment of inland bonded warehouses. The Wild Birds Protection Act has long been needed, in the interest of the agricultural classes no less than of the naturalist and the sportsman. And the Act for the administration of the estate of the late King of Oudh will prevent a great deal of unnecessary litigation, and has given much satisfaction to the Mahomedan community. These are all measures of practical utility, and we may congratulate Mr. Scobie on his first year's contribution to the Indian Statute Book.

THE Travancore Administration Report for last year is carefully drawn up and very tersely written, but contains little or nothing of more than usual interest. Cardamom-stealing appears to be a regular crime in the State, as horse-lifting is in Upper Sind. Among the gifts to the Zoological Gardens it is startling to find a bandicoot presented by a missionary. Possibly bandicoots are a curiosity in Travancore. It is curious to learn, in view of the fact in most other parts of India, that, out of seventy-two persons who committed suicide, only twelve were women. It would be interesting to inquire whether the condition of the lower classes makes them weary of life, or whether the lot of women is happier than it is elsewhere in India. Hanging was the favourite mode of courting death. Only nine men and six women drowned themselves. At a time when the Calcutta Mint is a subject of grave consideration it may be interesting to note that silver coin of the value of Rs. 51,260, and copper of the value of Rs.3,325 were struck last year at the Travancore Mint.

A STEAM LAUNDRY.—The Indian Daily News says:—"There have been several attempts to supersede the dhobi in Calcutta; but hitherto the attempts have not been attended with success. As a company's business, the amount of work done does not pay for the needful supervision; with a company's appliances and individual management and responsibility, there may be a better chance. At least, the attempt will be made at 44, Free School-street shortly. There are on the spot a number of washing machines, in which there will be no beating, rubbing and scrubbing to pieces, but steam and motion will be the chief agencies for cleaning, there being an engine of sixteen horse-power to supply them. The water used will be the filtered water of the Municipality. There is machinery for starching and ironing, and the chances of infection from any source may be said to be reduced to a minimum. The drying is done by centrifugal force. The charges are intended to be moderate, and the proprietor hopes to so manage the business as to obviate all ordinary objections, and prove that machine-washing is deserving of public support."

THE Bombay Municipal Corporation has disposed of a difficulty respecting the cremation of the Hindu dead in an expensive and not a very wise way. The fact is notorious that, notwithstanding all their prejudices, the poorer classes of the Hindus conduct the burning or burying of their dead in the most careless manner. A fashionable carriage road was made not mady years back close past the principal burning-ground of Bombay, and, notwithstanding the erection of a wall to screen the operations, the senses of ladies and gentlemen passing along the road have been frequently offended up to the limits of endurance by the sights forced on their view. A still more recent cause of complaint is the careless burying of their dead, in proximity to another new road, by poor Hindus who are not able to pay for a funeral pyre. Some Commissioner, under complete misapprehension of the principle which rules all Hindu caste prejudices, proposed a scientific crematorium as a grand solution of the problem how to reconcile Hindu customs and civilised ideas. The natural result was a series of demonstrations in the city, and signs of a free fight in the Corporation. So the project was hastily abandoned, and during the confusion that for a time possessed men's minds a resolution was passed to give the poor money to burn their dead instead of burying them. As one of the causes of offence has been the burning of bodies with insufficent fuel, we may look for complications before the new grant-in-aid system has been in vogue many weeks. The matter would not have been half as difficult of settlement if it had been approached in an ordinary instead of a scientific way. There are no prejudices which a Hindu will not give up provided only the suggestion be insinuated into him by slow degrees and circuitous methods. A direct change is what he abhors. Proofs of this are to be seen every day here in Calcutta, or even at Kalighat. A new place, out of the way, should have been assigned for the burning or burying in Bombay without the old place being interfered with, and a trifling payment made for every corpse taken to it. At the same time, any indecent exhibition at the old place should have been followed with punishment as a nuisance. These measures could not have failed to end in the gradual abandonment of the old place, when the payments might have been stopped, and the question laid at rest for ever. In the way the matter has been settled, the fundamental objection, which was the burning of bodies at all in the midst of where people live and work, has not been touched.

THE MYSTERIES OF CORRESPONDENCE.—A story is told by the Times of India of a young officer who, having been some six months only in India, was ordered almost from one end of the country to the other to join a battery to which he had been trans ferred. This was bad enough; but worse was still to follow. Soon after he was settled in his new station he received a letter from the Pay Examiner cutting him the whole of his travelling expenses, which were considerable. As he was travelling on the public service, and by order of the Commander-in-Chief, he knew he was entitled to a free passage, but he also knew that to be entitled to a thing is one matter, to get it another. He read over the letter of retrenchment again and noticed that it was "No. 2,876 of 187—" The happy idea then occurred to him that if he also headed his reply with an imposing nuber, it would very likely strike awe into the mind of the Baboo who had made the retrenchment, and let him see that he was not to be trifled with. So, albeit it was his maiden attempt at an official letter, he boldly headed it "No. 3,001 of 187—" so as to give himself a good start over his enemy, and dashed off a strong protest against the proposed cutting. He gained his point, which he attributes to this day not to the justice of his cause, but to the disinclinations of the Baboos of the Pay Department to tackle a subaltern who had svch an amazing official corresqoncence, and who was evidently a person not to be assailed with impunity.

THE Postal Department has come well out of the examination into its internal arrangements by the Public Service Commission —no Department better. Of its 40,000 employés only forty are imported Europeans. The patronage is found to be most fairly distributed, appointments in all the grades being to Europeans and Natives indiscriminately, according to merit, whilst these work together in excellent harmony. There is nothing new in all this; but there will be a great advantage in having the facts authoritatively and prominently published, as they eventually will be. A copy of the Commission's Report should go to every member of Parliament, to some of them two copies.

IN connection with a plan for improving the system of storm warnings, three new meteorological stations are to be opened on the Coromandel Coast, at Bimlipatam, Nellore and Cuddalore, and one on the Burma coast, probably at Tavoy. Mr. Elliot, Superintendent of the Bengal Meteorological Department, goes on an inspection tour to visit the coast stations shortly, and will select sites for the new observatories.

THE section of the Bolan Railway from Hirok to Darwaza, which is now a narrow gauge line, is likely shortly to be converted to a broad gauge on the Abt system. On this system, which is in use on many mountain railways in Europe, a third rail is laid down which is grasped by a cogged wheel on the engine. To convert the narrow gauge part of the Bolan line, all that is needed, is to lay down this third rail on it, and get out locomotives constructed on Abt's design. No change is required in rolling-stock. An experimental trial of Abt's system has been ordered on one mile of the Bolan line, and the conversion of the remainder of the line may confidently be anticipated.

THE idea of high-class education for the European in India, to take the place of that which should be got at home, is not one which at first commands much sympathy, thinks the Pioneer. It seems to mark out the recipient as doomed to an Indian life; and it puts prominently before us the existence of a class, not of the land, but yet detained in it, which we should generally be willing to overlook. Such education, too, it may be said, if it is to be any substitute for the English, must be expensive, and, if expensive, parents should rather make the extra effort required to send their children away. But those who have studied the question personally are the best judges, and if they believe there is a call for a high education here from parents who find the margin of expenditure insuperable, no one will deny that the Indian substitute should be as good as possible.

MINING IN MADRAS.—The Madras Government has issued a new set of rules regarding quarrying and mining leases in that Presidency, and in doing so announces that the right of the State to minerals is limited to a share of the produce of minerals worked, commuted into a money payment if thought necessary by the Government, in all lands occupied for agricultural purposes under rayat-warri potahs, and in jenman lands in the Malabar district. It is also stated that the Government has no claim to minerals in estates held on sunnuds of Permanent Settlements, in unfranchised inam lands, in religious service tenures, and in lands held on title deeds issued under the Waste Land Rules before the 7th of October, 1879, in which no reservation of the rights to minerals is made.

PROFITING BY LOW EXCHANGE.—Some of the officials employed on the railways in the Madras Presidency are making a good thing out of the full in silver and present low rate of exchange. It appears that in the agreements entered into between them and the railway companies it was stipulated that they should be allowed to remit home such portion of their salary as they might think fit at the rate of exchange of 1s. 10d. per rupee. The consequence is that a number of them now remit almost the whole of their pay to England, and get a draft on India in return. By this means, it is said, some of them manage to make a profit of Rs. 200 a month, but, says a contemporary, there are signs that this pleasant business will not last much longer, as the directors have ordered inquiries to be made on the subject.

PERHAPS it is only in an academic way, says the Bombay Gazette, that the organ of the Russian War office calls attention to the indefiniteness of the Afghan frontier far away to the east. But the matter is said to be constantly discussed by Central Asian politicians in St. Petersburg, and the reference to it in a semi-official paper recalls the fact that little more than a year ago a Russian agent made his appearance in Wakhan, one of the three districts on the Eastern Oxus, the Ameer's claim to which is sometimes disputed. It is needless to add that this same agent was said to have endeavoured to lure the Khan of the district from his allegiance to the Ameer—needless, also, to add that the report was not confirmed. There are three of these districts which, according to a certain Russian view of the question, may be deemed to be of debatable sovereignty —Wakhan, a narrow strip in the extreme north-eastern corner of Afghanistan, and conterminous with the Chinese frontier, and bounded on the north by the Oxus; and Shagnan and Roshan, on the other side of the river, and therefore either contiguous to, if not by some shadowy claim part of Bokharan territory. It would be easy, when the proper time was deemed to have arrived, for Russian claimants to the two Khanates of Shagnan and Rushan to establish an essential difference between these two and Wakhan, which being on the Afghan side of the Oxus could not so well be claimed for Bokhara. Wakhan, moreover, in spite of more recent pretensions to it which Russian agents—probably unauthorised—have put forward, was in the agreement of 1873 recognised as Afghan territory, while the two other Khanates were treated as independent. Since then, on the pretext of internal disorders, the two Trans-Oxus Khanates have been occupied by Afghan garrisons, small and ill-armed. But the population is small, Sir Douglas Forsyth, who visited the country ten or fifteen years ago, estimating that of Wakhan at only three thousand. When we hear from St. Petersburg that the people of these highland districts complain of the exactions and oppressions to which they are subjected by the Afghan Sirdars, we seem to hear a familiar tale told for a familiar purpose. It need not make us undervalue the arrangement which has just given a frontier to the Afghan from Zulfikar to Kham-i-Ab; but it is worth noting as indicating a possibility that we may some day hear of new frontier problems further to the East.

WITH reference to the orders of Government prohibiting members of the Civil Service from acquiring or holding lands for agricultural purposes, a question recently arose whether the interest in land intended to be prohibited is not a mere personal or individual interest, but extends to the acquisition of land for any relative, more particularly sons. The words "for any relative" raised the doubt, and it has been decided that the orders do prohibit the acquisition or holding of land for agricultural purposes, by a covenanted Civil Servant, for a son or other relative; but they do not prohibit the acquisition or holding of land for such purposes by a son or other relative, even although the land be acquired with money furnished by the Civil servant, provided that the money was given as an absolute gift, and that the Civil servant has bonâ fide no interest whatever, legal or equitable, in the land or its produce. This, of course, is the natural and equitable settlement of the matter. A Civil servant cannot divest himself or his relatives of the authority that surrounds him in India, and his relatives may therefore be able to buy land on more favourable terms than an unofficial buyer; but this is a lesser evil than the alternative—to debar a wide circle of persons, because they happen to be the relatives of a Civil servant, from holding land on their own accounts.

THERE is a mysterious post under the Government of India in the Foreign Department. It is not entirely unconnected with that other mystery, looked upon as a synonym of the Seventh Vial, which is known to some as the Director, and to others as the Suppressor of Thuggy and Dacoity. It rejoices in the designation of "Superintendent of the Operations for the Control of the Mughias, Meenas and other Predatory Tribes in Central India and Rajputana." Those officers of the graded service of the Political Department, who have at various times conducted the onerous duties of this high-sounding appointment have suffered many things at the hands of the rivald soldiery, chiefly on account of the real or supposed difficulty of disassociating the official relations of the distinguished political from the care of murghis and minas. Indeed, it is well known that at least one incumbent of this post was invariably hailed at a certain cantonment, where his convivial taste and love of sport had made him a general favourite and a familiar subject for social banter, as the "murghi and mina" man. The Government of India have no sympathy with him, for, horribile dictu, in a recent lengthy resolution, they have determined to add to the farmyard over which their unfortunate representative presides the entire tribe of—Budhuk!

The death is announced of Captain John Hay Crang, R.N., who entered the Naval Service in June, 1825. He served as lieutenant of the Clio at the capture of Woosung and Shanghai, and was present at the operations in the Yangtsze in 1842. The deceased also served in the Azof expedition of 1855, and received the Crimean and Turkish medals, Azof clasp, and the 5th class of the Medjidie, and was created a knight of the Legion of Honour.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

ON A SURF BOUND COAST.*

So little is known as to the "West Coast of Africa" that Mr. Crouch deserves the thanks of the public for affording information in the interesting form of personal experiences in regard to a portion of the world which, despite many disadvantages, is not without its attractions.

The dampness of the atmosphere is the chief drawback. "Clothes kept in drawers or packed in leather trunks suffer the most, and the climate is such that a coat left hanging in a cabin with the port open quickly absorbs enough moisture as to almost require wringing. It is impossible to keep cigars or tobacco in good condition except in the engine-room, which is the only place on board ship where the air is dry. Tobacco, especially, gets so damp that it cannot be smoked, and if left in either tin or wooden boxes rapidly becomes mildewed." Then one must not bathe, it is too "enervating and weakening," and is especially dangerous "when the sun is up." The night air is "laden with miasmic germs," and fever so dangerous that a man may be well at the beginning of the week and dead at the finish. As a set-off for these little peculiarities fruit is wonderfully fine and cheap; oranges a penny a dozen, pineapples a halfpenny each, bananas six for the same sum, to say nothing as to delicacies unknown to English palates. The scenery, need it be said, is most superb, especially as regards the magnificent surf which beats upon this coast; but if this latter adds to the beauty of the landscape the charm is assuredly gained at the expense of comfort, and, indeed, at times, of safety; for landing is an operation at once so difficult and dangerous that none but native boats, handled by native boatmen, can attempt to live through the tremendous breakers which beat with incredible fury on the beach of Western Africa.

Customs are at times quaint. Dress-improvers, consisting of a bundle of cotton cloth, are generally used as a ledge whereon to seat the baby. The people gesticulate so frantically that a stranger often fancies they are quarrelling, when, as a matter of fact, they are only inquiring after one another's health. Niggers, too, are always so merry, so full of fun and of life, that at every turn the traveller finds somewhat to amuse him or to occasion astonishment and mirth.

Mr. Crouch's book also explains a deal as to the procedure adapted in laying down telegraph cables in ocean deeps; and told as the story is, in plain language, void of all technicalities, there is much to be learned, and the task is as pleasant as it is profitable.

This volume can with confidence be recommended to all who wish to gain instruction and pass an evening or two in agreeable company and nice society on "A Surf Bound Coast."

LITTLE PETER.†

Little Peter is most excellent in its aims and objects. At every turn there is a quaint hint, calculated to instruct and admonish alike the young and the old. Our only doubt is not as to the lack of "moralities," but rather that the volume is too replete with warnings to hold fast to what is good and to spurn what is wrong. The vices, the peculiarities, the failings of poor fallen humanity are portrayed with no niggardly hand. And, withal, the story, though simple, is exquisitely touching and full of pathos. The poor wretched, ill-shapen, rejected charcoal burner, whom everyone spurns and everyone avoids, is a character which this gay, giddy world might well take to heart, learning therefrom that noble characters and heroic dispositions often lurk beneath a rough and rugged exterior. Lastly, how lovable, how sweetly charming, is the hero of the tale, the veritable "Little Peter," as, full of fun, of life and of hope, he plays with his cat, he coaxes his father to make friends with the charcoal burner, and—dies. Life is not all smiles; and the author making the story a reflex of the actual world in which we live, has dashed a drop of sadness into the cup of joy. Christmas should be for youth a happy time, but it will be none the worse, even for children, if they think of the troubles of others less favoured than themselves, and thank God that their lives are not saddened by the death of their "Little Peter." The illustrations are effective and numerous, and the volume as a whole reflects credit on all concerned in its appearance.

The Art Journal contains a very fine engraving of Armytage's well-known picture, entitled "A Dialogue at Waterloo." "Recent Continental Art" is good of its sort, but the reproductions are in a style which some people, ourselves amongst the number, consider open to adverse criticism. The reproduction of Eugene de la Croix's sensational pictures are the least happy productions in the number, which, though good, is perhaps a little below par.

The Century Illustrated Magazine is far and away the best number which has appeared for a long while. We scarcely dare suppose that our remarks in former issues as to the predominance of the American element to the exclusion of everything else have borne fruit; but it is, at any rate, gratifying to find that there are many articles which will be read with interest this side of the water, such as the "Sea of Galilee," "Notes on Parisian Newspapers," "Prison Life of the Russian Revolutionists," and the "Tonic Sol-fa System;" while, to crown all, there is a most admirable account of Durham Cathedral. The illustrations are, as usual, most charming.

The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) is this month well varied in its contents, and is fully supplied with drawings, plans, maps, &c., executed in its usual now well-known manner. General Mitford concludes his pleasant notes of travel, and Captain Gall also ends his clever series of papers on Modern Tactics. Dr. Dickinson has an interesting paper on Calcutta, as one of our Indian Military Stations, in which he deals somewhat hardly, we think, with the character of Lord Canning during the troubled time of the Mutiny. The professional papers affecting the services appear to be carefully and well written.

The Army and Navy Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for December is of lighter reading than usual, but will not on that account be less acceptable in the Mess Ante-rooms and Service libraries. The two papers regarding Burma, by C. T. Buckland and Melville Grey respectively, will be perused with considerable interest. C. J. L'Estrange contributes a thoughtful paper on the military position of Belgium as one of the great Neutral Powers, and Colonel Spalding gives an excellent precis of a Russian account of the Anglo-Russian expedition to Holland in 1799.

BOOKS FOR REVIEW.—"Puffs from the Engine of War" (W. H. Allen); "The Decline of British Prestige in the East," by Selim Faris (T. Fisher Unwin); "Life of William Carey, D.D.," by George Smith (John Murray); "Home Again," by George Macdonald (Kegan Paul and Co.); "The Boy Travellers on the Congo," by Thomas W. Knox (Sampson Low and Son).

The death is reported of General Henry Lawrence, a retired officer of the Indian Army, whose record of service goes back to the Napoleonic wars of the beginning of the century. Previous to joining the East India Company's service in 1811 General Lawrence served on board the Astell, East Indiaman, in a severe action fought in the Mozambique Channel in July, 1810, between three Indiamen and two French frigates and a corvette. After joining the Bengal Infantry he served in the operations against Malown in the Nepaulese war of 1814, with the reserve of the army during the Mahratta war of 1817-1819, and in minor campaigns during 1835 and the two subsequent years. General Lawrence was placed on the retired list in 1877.

Lieutenant-General Stephen Francis Charles Annesley died on the 24th ult., aged seventy years. He first served with the 37th Regiment in Ceylon during the rebellion of 1848, and subsequently with the 10th Regiment in the Indian Campaign of 1857-8, being present at the suppression of the mutiny at Benares, the capture of the fort of Atrowleea, the advances on Lucknow, including the action of Chanda, Umeerpore, Sultanpore, and Douraha, and at the siege and capture of Lucknow. In recognition of his military services he received the brevets of major and lieutenant-colonel.

The vacant colonelcy of the 5th Royal Irish Lancers will, it is understood, be offered to Lieut.-General the Hon. Somerset G. Calthorpe; he was aide-de-camp to Lord Raglan in the Crimea, from February, 1854, to June 1855, sharing in the battles of Alma, Balaclava, and Inkerman, and the siege of Sebastopol (brevet of major, medal with four clasps, Turkish medal, Knight of the Legion of Honour, and Order of the Medjidie).

THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER.—The Civil and Military Gazette writes:—"We must own to sharing the opinions of some who are best entitled to give it, that we ought to ultimately extend our railway systems to Kandahar at the one end, and Kabul at the other; and the line between them should be acknowledged as our first great line of defence, for a glance at the map will show it to be at once the shortest and most natural line of defence. But whether this be taken as the object to keep in view, or whether our aim be merely to have the power, on the outbreak of war, of promptly advancing on Ghazni in order to threaten the flank of a possible enemy in Kabul, the importance of Bannu as an advanced position is equally great; and we are proportionately glad to see this is being duly recognised. From Dera Ismail Khan the route would be by the Gomal, but the better and more direct route is admitted to be by the Tochi Pass and Dawar Valley, a route according to both history and tradition affected by Mahmud of Ghazni and Baber. The distance on the map is only some 140 miles, and the chief, if not the only difficulties in the way, would appear to be tribal ones. By way of Thal it is also within easy distance of the Kurram, a pass discredited during the last Afghan war, but still an important alternative route to Kabul."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THE INVASION OF INDIA: TWO OPINIONS.

THE visit of Lord Dufferin with his principal civil and military advisers to the North-West Frontier has brought forth a considerable deal of writing in the Indian Press English and Native, regarding the possible invasion of India by Russia. It may not be uninteresting to our readers to learn how a leading English journal in India and a leading Native paper treat this question. The Civil and Military Gazette is in a state of alarm because we are not pushing on the frontier defences sufficiently rapidly. Not content with the precautions taken within that frontier, the Lahore journal says :—

We must own to sharing the opinions of some who are best entitled to give it, that we ought to ultimately extend our railway system to Kandahar at the one end and Kabul at the other; and the line between them should be acknowledged as our first great line of defence, for a glance at the map will show it to be at once the shortest and most natural line of defence. But whether this be taken as the object to keep in view, or whether our aim be merely, on the outbreak of war, of promptly advancing on Ghazni in order to threaten the flank of a possible enemy in Kabul, the importance of Bannu as an advanced position is equally great; and we are proportionately glad to see this is being duly recognised. From Dera Ismail Khan the route would be by the Gomal, but the better and more direct route is admitted to be by the Tochi Pass and Dawar Valley, a route, according to both history and tradition, affected by Mahmud of Ghazni and Baber. The distance on the map is only some 140 miles, and the chief, if not the only difficulties in the way, would appear to be tribal ones. By way of Thal it is also within easy distance of the Kurram, a pass discredited during the last Afghan War, but still an important alternative route to Kabul.

The whole gist of the article from which the above is taken is to the effect that India is in immediate danger from Russian advances, but fortunately preparations are being made to resist such advances, thanks to "so-called alarmists, Sir Charles Macgregor and others." These alarmists have so "persistently placed the facts of our position before the English public" that "we can now not only place an army on the Helmund at short notice, but rail its supplies and supports direct from the depôts in India."

It may be very satisfactory to know this, if Russia is really coming forward so rapidly and persistently upon our Indian Empire. But on the day when an English newspaper in India was indulging in these fears, and suggesting means to meet them, a Native journal discussed the matter in a somewhat calmer spirit. It quotes its English contemporary as saying: "If the system of strategic railways is to be of any use it must include the protection of all vulnerable points on the frontier in whichever direction they may lie," and adds, "it is such twaddle talk as this that tries our patience." The Native journal, in fact, is not at all uneasy regarding a Russian invasion of India. It points out that Russia would first of all have to secure a safe passage through Afghanistan, and that this she is never likely to do. Even if the Amir was in favour of the Russian aims, the people of Afghanistan would not accept the position. "The Russians," says the Native journalist, "would have to fight every inch of ground before reaching British territories. Are they prepared for such a contingency? Is their financial position so secure as to permit of such a costly expedition? Then the chance of failure is a potent factor in a consideration of the question. What if they meet with a reverse at the very threshold of the enemy's country?" This little possibility has not been taken into account by the English journals which are sounding so many notes of warning as to Russia's rapid and sure encroach upon our Indian possessions. They take for granted that whatever Russia dares she can do. It is very curious to find a Native newspaper attempting to calm the anxieties of an English contemporary, but so it is. It quotes Shakespeare against Russophobists, applying to them the distich—and says, "But that anyone in India acquainted with the strength of British power and its resources could for a moment imagine that she is liable to be ousted by foreign invasion surpasses our understanding." It is gratifying to find this loyal feeling in the Native Press. In such loyalty is our strength and safeguard in India. Whatever opinions Englishmen here may hold as to Russia's intentions with regard to India no Englishman can help feeling gratified in the fact that the peoples of India will be with us in any struggle of the future against our rule. "Let England," says the Native paper to which we have referred, "continue the good work which she has undertaken to shed upon us, the blessings of civilisation, peace, and order, and we give her the assurance that she may safely defy the whole of Europe to displace her and drive her to the sea."

"In the night imagining some fear

We have touched upon this matter merely by way of contrast. With the English journalist we agree that it is right to be prepared for the worst, but, with the Native journalist, we prefer to hope for the best.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE appointment of an Inspector-General of Cavalry has been finally approved.

MAJOR MAYNE, R.A, having retired from the Service, is permitted to proceed to England.

4-1 LANCASHIRE DIVISION, R.A., will be located at Rangoon, and 2-1 Eastern Division at Thayetmyo.

CAPTAIN H. BECKHAM, 25th Bombay Light Infantry, has been appointed Port Transport Officer at Kyouksai.

THE appointment of Captain Beaufort, R.A., to officiate as Commandant, N-1 Mountain Battery is cancelled.

SURGEON-MAJOR J. F. KEITH, I.M.S., has been placed in medical charge of the 25th Bombay Light Infantry, vice Surgeon-Major Barren, sick.

COLONEL R. C. BUDD, Madras Staff Corps, has been permitted to retire from the service, with effect from Dec. 15, subject to Her Majesty's approval.

THE 6th Bengal Cavalry, who were under orders to march to Loralai, have since been instructed to halt at Dera Ghazi Khan, on arrival there, till further orders.

MAJOR F. H. R. DRUMMOND, 11th Bengal Lancers, has been appointed to officiate as Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, Intelligence Branch, vice Captain E. G. Barrow, appointed officiating Assistant Secretary, Military Department, Government of India.

A FURTHER extension has been granted for the retention of the services of Lieutenant-Colonel P. J. Maitland, Bombay Staff Corps, at Simla, to complete the remaining portion of the Afghan Boundary Commission work on which he is now employed.

MAJOR C. C. CARTER, Inspector of Sub-Marine Mining in India, having returned from special duty at Simla, has been ordered to proceed to Kurrachee. It is understood that the special duty on which he was engaged at Simla is connected with the reorganisation of the Force engaged on Sub-Marine Defences, and that the results of the conference will shortly appear in the India Army Circulars.

BRIGADE-SURGEON J. WALSH, Medical Staff, has been appointed Principal Medical Officer at the Cavalry Camp of Instruction at Lawrencepore instead of Brigade-Surgeon Potter, whose appointment has been cancelled. Surgeon J. Beatson, 10th Bengal Lancers, is appointed to the medical charge of the Native Field hospital, and Surgeon Eliot to be doing-duty officer with the hospital. Lieutenant Brasier-Creagh, 9th Bengal Lancers, is appointed Orderly Officer to Colonel Palmer.

CAPTAIN H. F. S. RAMSDEN, of the Military Accounts Department, who has been at Simla, on special duty in connection with the preparation of a Manual of Instructions for the Preparation, Submission and Adjustment of Accounts of the Army of India on Active Service, has received the appreciation of the Government of India for the good service rendered by him. The Manual will be adopted as a guide in the matters treated of, and it will be printed off and distributed to all concerned.

IN consequence of the Secretary of State for India having objected to the appointment of Captain E. E. Money, Quartermaster-General's Department, to the grade of Assistant Quartermaster-General, the Government of India has been compelled to refuse sanction to Captain Money retaining that appointment until he becomes qualified to hold it by virtue of his promotion to the rank of Major. Captain Money reverts, therefore, to Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, which appointment he will be permitted to hold until he completes his five years' tour of service in that grade, when he will have to return to regimental duty. The objection to the appointment is made under paragraph 71, section V. Queen's Regulations, under which the appointments of Assistant Adjutant-General and Assistant Quartermaster-General are to be held exclusively by field officers, and it is extremely unfortunate for Captain Money that he will not complete the qualifying service for promotion to the rank of Major until some six or seven months after he has completed his tour of service as a Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, and vacated his appointment under the five-year rule.

THE arms issued to the Burma Military Police by the Ordnance Department are the long Snider cut down about six inches and refitted. The conversion necessitated the placement of a new foresight. The work of conversion has been carried out at the Ordnance Department, Poona (for Bombay), and at Rawal Pindi, Allahabad and Fort William arsenals (for Bengal). The quality of the work executed at the several arsenals varies considerably, and it will take no one by surprise if the rifles are found on trial to be two or three hundred yards oversighted. Indeed, the question of accuracy appears to have been entirely overlooked in the hurry of turning out these arms; and, as the backsight remains unaltered, bad shooting may be looked for. The converted arms turned out from the Fort William Arsenal will be found, on trial, to be the most serviceable, but even these are much over-sighted. The Ordnance Department, however, deserve their meed of praise for the rapidity with which some 30,000 rifles were cut down, resighted, fitted with nose caps, &c., rebrowned, and turned out of the several arsenals above-named, and it speaks volumes that their resources enabled them to perform this work with the material at hand and the aid of a few extra workmen, without having to indent in England for a single weapon.

H.M.'s TROOPSHIP Serapis, Captain F. R. Boardman, C.B., arrived in Bombay at 6 A.M., on Wednesday morning, Nov. 16, with relief troops for India, having left Portsmouth on the 19th ultimo. She called during her voyage at Suez on the 2nd inst, sailing from the latter place on the following day. She experienced rather strong adverse winds and heavy seas while passing between Gibraltar and Malta. Thence she made a fine passage out until within three days' sail from Bombay, when she had unfavourable winds and heavy thunder showers. On the whole, however, she had a pleasant passage, The total number of troops arriving by her including a part battalion of the Cheshire regiment from Chester, was sixty-five officers, twenty ladies, eleven children, 1,215 rank and file, twenty-eight women and thirty-eight children belonging to companies drawn from home-battalions at Colchester, Woolwich, Dover and other places. The Serapis had the whole strength of sixty-seven officers and about 1,200 men with their families embarked at Portsmouth. Of these about 800 troops, including officers and their families, belonging to the first battalion of the 3rd Rifle Brigade left the ship at Suez to relieve the part battalion of the Cheshire regiment serving in Egypt.

SOME Warrant Officers of the Ordnance Department at Rawal Pindi are in trouble over sending a "round-robin" to the several arsenals. It is believed that one sent to Fort William arsenal was shown to the officer in charge, who is said to have promptly reported what he considered to be a serious military offence.

ENGLAND AND IRELAND.—The incarceration of Mr. Wilfred Blunt leads a Native paper to make the following remarks:—"The unjust and despotic treatment of Ireland by the English nation and the English Parliament has already begun to recoil upon its authors. In permitting the Executive Government to rob the Irish nation of free speech England has done an act of injustice which has already begun to bear fruit on English soil. If there be one right which the free English people value more than any other it is the right of free speech—the right of holding public meetings. But they stand now a chance of losing the time-honoured and valued right. The present Government, not satisfied with wielding the infernal engines of oppression in Ireland, have begun to use them against Englishmen themselves. This is God's warning to the English people. If they take the warning, well and good; but if they do not heed to this timely warning sounded by Providence Himself, this Irish affair will be even as a gangrene in the free constitution of England, and will ultimately poison the entire body. So long the Irish policy of the British Parliament was a scandal and disgrace; but it is now assuming a gangrenous appearance. Let the British nation beware!"

SOME remarkable stories occasionally find their way into India from Afghanistan. Here is one of them. The friends of Nur Mahomed state that the present General of the Jelalabad force sent twenty assassins to kill Nur Mahomed Khan, son of Wali Mahomed Khan. Nur Mahomed was fortunately absent on the night that they went to his house for the purpose, and another man was sleeping on his bed, whose head the assassins cut off and took to the General, who, when he saw it, found at once it was another man's head.

THE Government of Madras are putting forth a special effort to encourage the growing of barley on the Hills. They have issued instructions for a memorandum to be prepared detailing the description of barley required for malting purposes and stating the method in which it can best be grown and prepared for the market. They have also intimated to their civil officers that no opportunity should be lost of impressing upon the ryots the great advantage which will result to them in the way of obtaining a ready and remunerative market for the grain, if carefully grown and prepared. It is further proposed to hold an annual barley show on the Nilghiris, and to offer prizes worth the while of the ryots competing for. A further encouragement is given to the new industry by the Murree Brewery Company, who offer seed barley from the Punjaub gratis on the condition that a similar quantity is returned to them after the harvest, the surplut crop remaining in the hands of the cultivator. That the experiment will ultimately prove a success, if energetically pushed, there can be no reason to doubt. The Punjaub has shown the way to the other cold districts of India. Last year the exports of Punjaub barley from the Port of Bombay amounted in value to eight lakhs of rupees, and of this three-fourths went to the United Kingdom to be used for brewing purposes. This trade has sprung up only within the past year or two, but it now shows every chance of proving an important and thriving industry.

PURE CONCENTRATED
COCOA

Prepared by a new and special scientific process, securing extreme solubility, and developing the finest flavour of the Cocoa.

PURE—EASILY DIGESTED—ECONOMICAL

"I consider FRY'S PURE CONCENTRATED COCOA much better and more economical for the use of troops than the usual rations of coffee and tea that are now supplied. The strengthening qualities FRY'S COCOA possesses renders it a valuable adjunct to the list of medical comforts."

JAMES C. DICKINSON,
Retired Staff Surgeon.

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

ESTABLISHED 1833

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

Th Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGIATE SCHOOL.

THE course of instruction is designed to PREPARE BOYS (Sons of Gentlemen, from 7 years of age) to occupy the positions of Land Owners and Occupiers, Land Agents, Surveyors, intending Colonists, &c. The education secured at this institution is of a very superior character, the whole object of the School being to impart a thoroughly practical and scientific knowledge of all agricultural subjects; a thorough moral, intellectual, and physical training, it pledges itself to send forth its pupils practically religious and sound scholars. The school is most pleasantly situated in a healthy locality. The greatest possible care is bestowed upon the health and domestic comfort of the pupils. The diet is excellent and unlimited. The school is very strongly recommended. References throughout Great Britain.—Address for prospectus the PRINCIPAL, Maypole Road, East Grinstead, Sussex.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

HERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

SYSTEMS OF

TESTIMONIALS.

From R. NORMAN SHAW, Architect to the Royal Academy :—

29, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C.,
February 19 1884.

The "Æolus" Waterspray Company have fixed two Air Extractors and one Air Warmer in the Life School of the Royal Academy of Arts with, we all think, the happiest results. Our troubles with that school have always been very great, as owing to the amount of gas consumed, and the necessity of keeping the school well heated on account of the Nude Models, its tendency has been to get unbearably hot, and when windows were attempted to be opened the draughts were most dangerous. It is now kept at a pleasant even temperature, and there are no draughts. The reason for this is not difficult to find. The very hot air from the steam-pipes, and the fumes from the gas, are carried off as fast as they are generated, and a continual stream of warm fresh air being supplied, the school is kept comfortable.

(Signed) R. NORMAN SHAW, R.A., Architect.

Dear Sir,—We have pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of your "Invisible Roof Ventilators," which we fixed in above church with admirable results.—We are, yours faithfully,

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DYSENTERY.

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME of DIARRHŒA."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This caution is necessary, as many persons have been deceived by purchasers by false representations.

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Cholera in Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

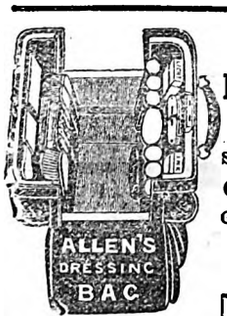
DIAMANTÉ BRILLIANTS.



The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS originally introduced into England by the SOLE AGENTS, Messrs. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established, and the success of their enterprise has surpassed their expectations. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS afford the only instance hitherto attained of the perfect representation of real Diamonds by artificial means. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real Diamonds of great value at the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grand monde and élite of society, and are now worn at the Court Balls and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly Diamond Ornaments, and can be worn at all times with confidence and security.

Every article is Mounted in 18-Carat Gold by the best Diamond Setters, exactly in the manner of the finest Brazilian Diamonds.

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 28, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 25th November; from Allahabad and Madras to the 23rd November; and from Calcutta to the 22nd November.

WHEN the Mails left India the Viceroy and Commander-in-Chief were still on tour, and both were at Peshawur on November 24th, where a grand parade of all the troops in garrison was held, and a ball given by the members of the Peshawur Club.

SIR AUCKLAND COLVIN had arrived at Allahabad, and assumed charge of the office of Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces from Sir Alfred Lyall.

SIR ALFRED LYALL and Lady Lyall are returning to England by the P. and O. steamer Verona from Bombay on December 2nd. Miss Evelyn Lyall and Mr. Miller, whose engagement has been announced, accompany them. A movement is on foot among the Native public of the Province to found some lasting memorial of the ex-Lieutenant-Governor.

BEFORE her departure from Allahabad Lady Lyall published a letter of thanks to those who had aided her in giving a start to the National Association's work in the North-West.

THE Gazette of India publishes the official announcement of the resignation of the Bengal Civil Service by Sir W. W. Hunter, and of Dr. French of the Bishopric of Lahore.

THE impending retirement is announced of Mr. Justice Brandt, of the Madras High Court and Civil Service. Mr. Brandt was only appointed to the Bench in 1884, and is retiring accordingly on an ordinary pension.

THE appointments of the two extra Judges—Mr. Rattigan and Mr. Roe—to the Punjab Chief Court are formally notified in the Gazette of India. The new Justices have entered on their mission of grappling with the arrears of the Court.

MR. E. J. SINKINSON, B.A., LL.B., at present officiating as Accountant-General at Bombay, has been appointed officiating Financial Secretary to the Government of India, and will eventually obtain the substantive post. It is understood that Mr. E. F. T. Atkinson, who has been recently acting as Financial Secretary, was not desirous of retaining the appointment.

MR. A. COTTERELL TRUPP, Accountant-General of these Provinces, is promoted by the recent changes at the top of the Financial Department, to the first grade, and becomes Accountant-General at Bombay. Probably either Mr. Rawlins or Mr. Jacob will succeed Mr. Trupp at Allahabad. Further changes will come about in the spring when Mr. Clogstoun, Accountant-General in Madras, and Mr. Finlay, officiating Accountant-General in Bengal, intend going home on furlough.

MR. J. H. NELSON, a Madras Civilian and Judge, and a voluminous writer on Indian law, has retired from the Service, but only to join the local Bar, at which he intends practising.

H.E. THE VICEROY has visited Quetta, en route to which place he rode to the Khojak Pass, and also viewed the Beleli position, but time did not allow of a detailed examination.

AT Sukkur H.E. and Lady Dufferin were the guests of Colonel Wallace and Mr. and Mrs. Lightfoot, and while there inspected the new Sukkur Bridge Works.

THE Viceroy passed through Sibi on his way to Dera Ghazi Khan on Nov. 18.

LORD DUFFERIN reached Dara Ghazi Khan on Nov. 21. His Excellency held levées, both at Dera Ghazi Khan and Dera Ismael Khan.

THE weekly summary from Upper Burma reports the Northern Division generally quiet.

CHINDWIN is also fairly quiet, but petty dacoity prevails in Lower Chindwin, consequent, it is said, on scarcity of food.

THE Pagan district is disturbed in parts, and the Eastern Division is quiet.

Two cases of successful resistance of dacoits by villagers occurred in the Mecktile District. In one a dacoit was killed.

H.E. THE GOVERNOR OF BOMBAY is now at Mahableshwur.

HIS EXCELLENCY leaves for Ahmedabad on Dec. 13, and after visiting various places in the neighbourhood, returns to Bombay about Jan. 1.

ON the 16th December Lord Reay invests the Maharajah of Idar with the insignia of K.C.S.I.

MR. PARSONS, the Judge of Rutnagherry, has been appointed to act in the High Court in the place of the Hon. Mr. West.

MR. JUSTICE PARSONS took his seat on the 22nd.

THE Bombay Extension Committee have concluded their report, and received the thanks of Government. The Report is not yet published, however.

THE Puttiala Council of Regency, on behalf of the Maharajah, has offered all the pecuniary and military aid the State can provide for frontier defence.

THE Council has also asked permission to equip and keep ready as many of its forces as may be necessary for this purpose.

THE Syndicate of the Punjab University has resolved to confer a degree of Doctor of Oriental Learning on Bishop French.

THE new Victoria Library was formally opened at Indore by Sir Lepel Griffin, K.C.S.I., on the 17th November.

A FAREWELL Ball was given at Allahabad to Sir Alfred and Lady Lyall on the 18th November.

THE office of the Consulting Engineer for State Railways is to be transferred from Agra to Jubbulpore.

THE Lundi Kotal Telegraph Line is now completed.

THERE were 17,741 fatal cases of cholera in the N.W. Provinces during September, against 30,700 during the previous month.

MR. JOHN NUGENT, Secretary to Government, the Revenue, Financial, and General Department, has been appointed Chief Secretary in place of the Hon. J. C. Richey, now a member of the Governor's Executive Council. Mr. Lee-Warner succeeds Mr. Nugent.

A TRUMPET-MAJOR of the 7th Hussars was shot accidentally while out shooting, and has since succumbed to the injuries he received.

Mr. A. GOUGH, Principal of the Muir College, has been elected to the Registrarship of the University.

COLONEL TOKER is acting for Colonel Collen as Military Secretary during the latter's two months' leave to England.

MR. JUSTICE MAHMOOD, of the Allahabad High Court, is better. The Third Bench of the High Court sat as usual.

THE Office of the Consulting Engineer to Government for State Railways will shortly be transferred to Jubbul-pore from Agra. Mr. Mallet has already arrived in the station, and is making arrangements for the accommodation of the office.

COLONEL A. K. BADCOCK has proceeded to Army Headquarters to officiate as Commissary-General-in-Chief, an appointment which rumour says is to be a permanency. Keen, energetic, and clear-sighted, it is emphatically a case of the right man in the right place.

MR. STEPHEN JACOB, C.S., who has been on special duty in the Finance Department, submitting for the orders of Government the several recommendations contained in the Finance Committee's Report, has finished his work and gone home on leave.

THE question of the exploration of the country between the Chittagong frontier and Upper Burma still awaits decision, but General White is arranging for a force to sweep the Yaw country clear right up to the Eastern Lushai border.

IT has been notified that the first appointment of officers to the Military Accounts Department in India will for the future be for a few years, during the first of which they will be on probation, and they will be seconded in their regiments during two years, at the expiration of which they will be transferred permanently to the department or revert to the regiment at their request, or by recommendation of the head of the department promotion, whether temporary or permanent, will be made according to merit, and not seniority. The appointment of Controller, Military Accounts, will be ordinarily filled by selection from the most efficient.

A MEETING has been held of the provisional committee of the Indian Tea Supply Association, the object of which was to encourage the consumption of Indian tea amongst all classes of Natives by sale through agents all over the country. The tea is made up in small packets. The agents, Messrs. Lyall and Marshall, announce that shares to the extent of one lakh has already been subscribed. It has been resolved to have a company registered. The committee has instructed the agents to make the necessary arrangements to commence business at once.

EVERYTHING is proceeding satisfactorily in the settlement of the King of Oudh's estate under Colonel Prideaux's management. A report on all matters connected with the settlement of affairs will be ready for Government on the resumption of business in Calcutta.

THE general desire among the Native public of the North-West Provinces to found some memorial of the administration of Sir Alfred Lyall is taking organised shape. A considerable sum has already been subscribed.

A SHARP shock of earthquake was felt at Minhila, in Upper Burma, at about ten o'clock on the morning of Saturday, the 12th November. The direction of the shock was from north-east to south-east, and it lasted about thirty seconds.

THE actual receipts from eight sales of Bengal opium and seven months' duty on opium exported from Bombay have amounted to Rs. 5,43,40,095, which is Rs. 19,43,425 less than the estimated receipts. Of this latter amount Bengal opium has contributed Rs. 14,33,300, and Bombay opium Rs. 5,10,125.

THE number of emigrants who left the port of Calcutta in the month of September last was, 1,106, of whom 557 went to Demerara and 549 to Trinidad.

NOTES.

THE news wired by the Times correspondent this morning will be found in another column. So far as India proper is concerned it is satisfactory enough; the Viceroy and Commander-in-Chief still on their important tours, while peaceful measures of reform and utility are being discussed in the plains.

THE proposed abolition of the Calcutta Mint is no new scheme, however. It has often before been suggested, but has hitherto met with little encouragement in the Presidency. It would appear now, however, that the mercantile community, and the English Press approve under certain conditions of the abolition being carried out. The native Press of the City of Palaces is said to take little or no interest in the matter.

THIS was only to be expected of the latter, whose writers delight only in finding fault with everything that happens under English rule in a political or municipal direction. The Natives who now constitute the chief power in the Calcutta Municipality are doing their best to demonstrate the unwisdom of having given them so liberal a share of local self-government. Were they quite unchecked in their aims, Calcutta would soon revert to the disgracefully dirty hole it was before Sir Stuart Hogg took it into his vigorous hands. As it is, the Times correspondent reports that there are abuses still existing "which render Calcutta, from a sanitary point of view, a standing reproach to the Empire, and a source of danger to the health of the world."

THIS may perhaps be carrying reproach too far, but the Calcutta Englishman to hand last mail writes strongly on the delay and opposition that there has been shown for the past three years in opening out a ground street from the Hughli Bridge to Sialda, saying that "Calcutta will cease to be Calcutta unless such a road be constructed and sunlight and fresh air let into a region which knows of those blessings only by tradition dating backwards a hundred years."

MADRAS boasts of its better sanitation, but it can hardly do so with regard to its moral atmosphere. Another Madras scandal has cropped up, with a lady in the case also. The Morgan-Ross divorce case, which was still pending when the mail left, is not very pure or pleasant reading even for persons not over squeamish, and we have not transferred the malodorous story to these columns to-day. One of the Madras papers had pages of it several mails ago, but the Bombay and Bengal Press appear to have cared to go into some of the details of it now. The very proper Pioneer condenses it in a way which will possibly remind some of its readers of how Don Juan was taught Latin from an expurgated edition of the classics.

THE most painful part of the story told in the Madras court is that given in the defence set up to the effect that the whole case is one of conspiracy against the defendant, wilful and corrupt perjury on the part of the lady, and too much ignorance or too much knowledge on the part of her husband. Considering the position that the parties hold in English society in India, whatever be the result a very unfortunate scandal has occurred for the delectation of Native writers, who will draw their own evil conclusions against Western morality generally and its desire to ingraft Western ideas into the homes and harems of the East.

AND there will be English writers at home who will take up the parable too and be much shocked at a continuing proof of the loose character of British men and matrons in the sunny land of Ind. Lord Byron wrote that what men call gallantry and gods by a harsher term was "much more common where the climate's sultry." But this is a libel on the plains of India; it is in the cool and bracing atmosphere of the hills, where the eternal snows are supposed to temper nature, that the majority of domestic scandals arise. It is a sad reflection, but it is unfair to blame the sun, which has so few friends in the plains, for the evil done under the moonlight of the hills.

THE Madras Mail must, however, be of opinion that the story to be told in all its details will be interesting and edifying to its home readers, and so in the copy of the paper to hand this morning no less than thirty-two long columns of close type are devoted to unfolding this new Madras scandal. But we are sure that Sir Charles Lawson must be shocked to find the Presidency he so ably represents in many ways in dirty water again, and has only thus told the tale in his paper that a moral may be drawn from it.

SIMLA must certainly hide its diminished head, and other pleasant but quieter hill stations, of which it has been sung or said that "loves were many and morals were few," cannot hope for such notoriety. But though cynics may sneer or smile, the evil wrought is great, and this can be said without entering the pulpit of cant or preaching the doctrine condemned by the Apostle of "being righteous over-much."

HAS a new departure taken place in the experimental department of medical science, or is there a redundancy of Civil Surgeons in the Punjab that the Government has determined that they should dose themselves with a deadly drug? Otherwise what is the meaning of the following official notification recently published in the Punjab Gazette?

It has been arranged that about 50 ounces of hydrochlorate of morphia will be taken annually by the Civil Surgeons of the Punjab from the Ghazipore Factory.

One must sympathise either with the Civil Surgeons of the Punjab or with the grammar of the Government Gazette.

INCOME-TAX AT CALCUTTA.—The Englishman writes on this subject:—"Now that the Government is sorely pushed for funds, why does it insist on working the Income-take Office in such a way as probably to lessen the collections by several lakhs a year? Let any business-man pay a visit to the Collectorate: he will see at a glance that the establishment is quite unable to cope with the demands made upon it. From the highest to the lowest everyone is at high pressure, and it is only a question of time where the collapse will come. This collapse will probably not be regretted from a public point of view, whatever the Government might think. In connection with the collection of the income-tax, we have a very serious matter to bring to the notice of the public. It has been clearly understood, almost from the day on which the income-tax was imposed, that all declarations of income would be held as strictly confidential, and that they would not be allowed to go out of the hands of the Collector himself; and with this arrangement every one was satisfied. But a great change has been made—a change that will be received with intense dissatisfaction and dislike by all communities. It seems that, by a recent order of the Board of Revenue, the system that has been hitherto in force, by which the Collector has been enabled to keep the necessary particulars furnished by the public entirely to himself, has been abolished, and that all returns relating to incomes are in future to be thrown open to the whole office. Now, the Government of India pledged itself that every precaution should be taken to prevent the private affairs of those who had to make returns becoming known through the medium of the authorities, and it even went so far as to have printed on the top of the tax form a note to the effect that the communication 'is to be returned in sealed covers and addressed to the Collector, and marked confidential'; from which it was inferred that Government intended to keep its word so far as secrecy was concerned."

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, Dec. 11.

The Viceroy's visit to the cavalry camp of exercise at Lawrencepore on the 2nd inst. is described as a magnificent spectacle. Nine cavalry regiments, under General Luck, took part in the display, the principal feature of which was a sham fight. The Viceroy spent the day at the camp, and, before leaving, congratulated General Luck on the appearance of his troops. The next halt of Lord Dufferin was made at Lahore, where, however, nothing of importance took place. The party arrived at Bhurtpore last Thursday, and will remain there till to-morrow, for shooting. The chief ceremony for this week will be the opening of the new railway bridge over the Ganges at Benares. Lord Dufferin is to arrive in Calcutta on Saturday.

The Government does not appear to have come to any decision on the question of the acceptance or refusal of the Nizam's offer, and various suggestions as to the use to be made of the money continue to be put forward by the Indian newspapers. Regarding that offer, I am able to state, on good authority, that the Nizam never sent a cheque for 20 lakhs to Lord Dufferin, as has been asserted by a London journal. He only intimated that he was prepared to give a cheque on London, if required, from his reserve fund of over a million sterling. The letter containing the offer was not sent direct to the Viceroy, but through the Minister and the Resident. The latter official asked Colonel Marshall to deliver it.

The Bengal Chamber of Commerce has replied to the reference made to it by the Government on the subject of the proposed abolition of the Calcutta Mint. The Chamber fully recognizes the importance of the suggestion made by the Finance Committee, and, after discussing that suggestion with the local banks, has arrived at the general conclusion that if the Government is satisfied that an important economy will result, the commercial community need offer no objections, provided the Government undertake to give the Calcutta public the option of receiving currency in Calcutta, in exchange for bullion coined in the Bombay Mint. The Chamber suggests that this option should be given without extra charge, but would, if necessary, be content with an undertaking that no higher charge should be made for transfer than one-sixteenth per cent. The Chamber assumes that the Government would receive bullion in Calcutta for coinage in Bombay, and return the coined equivalent to Calcutta without charge for carriage. The local English newspapers take a similar view of the proposal to that of the Chamber of Commerce, while the Native Press seems to show little interest in ths question.

The Chamber of Commerce has also addressed the Government on the subject of the now pending Calcutta Municipal Bill. The principal points urged are the exemption of machinery for assessment, the necessity of a residential qualification for the franchise, the omission of the clause regarding the application of municipal funds to education, the extension of the water supply, and the advisability of inserting stringent building regulations, to prevent any increase in the number of tortuous and narrow streets. This matter of Calcutta municipal reform is attracting a good deal of attention, and it is to be hoped that the local legislature will take advantage of the Bill now before it to sweep away many abuses which render Calcutta, from a sanitary point of view, a standing reproach to the Empire and a source of danger to the health of the world.

The Commission appointed to inquire into the system of irrigation connected with the Soane Canal, in Behar, is now sitting at Arrah, and, judging from the published reports, the evidence has succeeded in eliciting serious disclosures regarding irregularities on the part of the assessing and collecting officers. Some witnesses stated that the cultivators were compelled to pay for water which they never used, that others escaped a just assessment by bribing the assessing officers, that water was often withheld unless a bribe was forthcoming, and so on. The subordinate officers of the collecting department are said to form a family league, who work together in manipulating the assessment. The inquiry is still incomplete, and the other side has not yet been heard in its defence.

The Patiala Regency has agreed to construct 100 miles of a broad-gauge railway from Patiala to Bathinda. The Punjab Government will carry out the work, which it is expected will cost about Rs. 80,000 a mile.

For some time past an interesting discussion has been going on in the columns of the up-country newspapers on the subject of the decline in the export of tea from Northern India to Afghanistan and Central Asia. This decline is attributed partly to the high transit duties levied in Afghanistan, and partly to the import duty exacted at the Russian frontier. It is stated that dues amounting to more than Rs. 26 are levied on one maund, or 80 lb., of Indian tea on its passage from Peshawur to Cabul, while the carriage expenses over the same distance amount to Rs. 18.

When the tea reaches the Bokharan frontier, Russia exacts a further duty of Rs. 38. In face of these facts it is no wonder that a trade which once gave promise of considerable development is now rapidly falling off; and it would seem to be time for the Government to make representations to the Ameer on the subject.

The trade and navigation reports fer October show the following results:—Imports, Rs. 6,73,76,352 against Rs. 6,23,71,956 in October last year; exports, Rs. 6,45,96,826 against Rs. 6,21,57,461; import duty collected, Rs. 24,37,434 against Rs. 15,74,405; export duty collected, Rs. 3,305,592 against Rs. 3,12,480. The results for the seven months from April to October as compared with the figures for the corresponding period of last year are:—Imports, Rs. 42,03,41,545 against Rs. 41,07,29,001; exports, Rs. 50,42,04,558 against Rs. 50,41,10,545; import duty, Rs. 1,44,05,620 against Rs. 1,38,21,926.

AFGHANISTAN AND CENTRAL ASIA.

CALCUTTA, Dec. 11.

The new Afghan Boundary Commission under Captain Yate reached Zulfikar on November 10, and found there ample supplies, which had been collected by the Afghan authorities. Captain Yate reached Kara Tapa, on the Khushk river, on the 15th, and was still there on the 25th. A detachment of the 11th Bengal Lancers, forming his escort, joined him there, after a rapid and successful march from India, without a single casualty. The work of demarcation will be taken in hand at once.

News has been received from Persia that Iskander Khan, who was lately reported to have been appointed Governor of Penjdeh, is safe at Teheran.

Colonel Le Mesurier, of the Royal Engineers, who is visiting Central Asia, has arrived in Bokhara. He travelled by rail to Chardjui, and thence rode and drove. He is said to have walked about the Bokhara bazaars unmolested.

There is no news of interest from Afghanistan. The Ameer continues to recruit Duranis at Kandahar, and a force of 1,100 of these recruits lately marched thence to Kabul.

BURMA.

RANGOON, DEC. 11.

The details of the fighting near Bhamo have now been received. The position held by the Kachyens, and attacked by the column commanded by Captain Triscott, could only be approached by a single mountain path, with dense jungle on either side. The path was blocked by felled tress and bamboo spikes. As the column advanced the enemy continued invisible, firing from concealed positions in the jungle. The column continued to advance under fire, and forced its way into the hills for half a mile, and four small villages were burnt. From each of these fire was opened, as well as from the jungle. Our men behaved very well, and Captain Triscott led the column gallantly and with judgment. The strength of the Kachyens engaged is estimated at about 300. Eight dead bodies of the Kachyens were seen, but the enemy's loss was probably much heavier.

The northern Shan column started from Mandalay yesterday. News has been received from the southern Shan column from Mobeye, dated December 3. Karennee, chief of Tusbya, had arrived in the camp, accompanied by a Danish missionary, to settle his quarrel with the chief of Mobeye. To arrange this feud was one of the objects which the column had to accomplish. There was much sickness in the British portion of the southern Shan column owing to the malarious nature of the district traversed.

The military operations in the Yaw country have commenced under Brigadier-General Low. The column commanded by Colonel Gatacre, of the 23rd Bombay Infantry, has leit Pouk for Gungaw-Myoung. The column commanded by Captain Scallon, of the 23rd Bombay Infantry, has advanced into the Kyan valley to clear that district of dacoits. It will eventually join Colonel Gatacre's column at Gungaw. The advance of the column starting from Myeltha has been delayed in order to enable a company of the Rifle Brigade to join it. The cavalry force commanded by Colonel Heyland, of the Bombay Lancers, is operating in the Pekano district. Ottoma, the chief dacoit leader, is known to be in the stretch of country between the Moo and the Salem rivers. This tract has been surronnded by several detachments.

Two lines of communication between Upper Burma and India are now open. The northern route runs from Munipore to Tammu, thence to Sittang, on the Chindwin, and again from Sittang to Shigaung on the Irrawaddy. This route, which is fit for pack transport, will shortly be traversed by two Goorkha regiments, the 42nd and 43rd, one coming from India, the other returning. The southern route consists of a good cart road from Minbu to Napeh, and thence through the Aeng Pass to Akyab. A central route is now suggested, from a point on the Myeltha river in the Yaw country across the hills to Chittagong. An attempt will be made to send a party from Upper Burma across this route, and a party will also advance from Chittagong. Some danger may attend the attempt to open up this route.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE ENGLISH IN INDIA.

Few of us, I believe, realise the vast amount of harm done to English rule in India by Englishmen themselves. Of course, this is not due to "malice aforethought," but rather to youth and inexperience. The offenders are almost invariably very juvenile—usually between the ages of eighteen and twenty, and seldom over twenty-five—but the harm done, nevertheless, is a very real one, and none feel the effect of the injury so much as the English Government of India. A boy of eighteen joins his regiment, or comes out to some commercial house, or indigo or tea concern; he quickly finds out the childish side of the Indian character, and then, true to the instinctive love of domineering inherent in almost all youthful and unformed characters, he exerts his power to work off irritation induced by a variety of causes, climatic and otherwise. This love of what we may aptly call cruelty is inherent in human nature, and is particularly noticeable in children. The lower we go down in civilisation the more we find the love of cruelty developed, until at last among some savage tribes, it becomes a perfect study as to how the amount of pain may be inflicted proportionate to the power of human nature to endure it without loss of consciousness. This is when the natural childish instincts have been matured and developed by years and experience.

One willingly grants that this is the outcome of his own youth and inexperience, and that with increased years will come increased wisdom, and that he will become in time like his older comrades. Usually a couple years or less cures him of the more violent stage of his folly; but the affectation of an aggressive superiority is much longer lived, and only ceases on his arrival at real manly maturity. It is rare indeed to find a case of a man of mature years and experience who habitually demeans himself in a discourteous manner in his dealings with natives of the country; but nevertheless the harm done before he arrives at this stage to the Government which he perhaps serves is a very real one indeed.

It must often have struck every man who takes the trouble to think that it is a remarkable circumstance that the Englishman is most popular among the Natives and in the districts where he is least seen and known. Compare the kindness and courtesy of Natives of a rural district and those near a British cantonment or settlement. How many men among us who have been indebted to the hospitality of Natives during a distant shooting excursion and have not been struck by the difference in their behaviour and those inhabiting what I may call, in contradistinction "home villages." In most semi-barbarous countries the opposite experience holds good. In China, for instance, misbehaviour of Natives is ascribed to their ignorance of foreigners; how, then, comes it that in India we find the opposite holds good? The reason is not far to seek. The English Government is decidedly popular with the mass of the people, because they know the English Government is broadly just in its dealing with them, and they have little intercourse with the servants and retainers of individual Englishmen. The greater their means of intercourse with the servitors of their rulers the more they hear of acts of individual insult and bullying, and the whole mass of Englishmen suffer in consequence of the few.

The Government of the country being foreign to every portion of it an immense amount of harm is caused by this thoughtless conduct. That the harm done is not greater is due to the fact that the offenders are comparatively few and the mass to be permeated is enormous; but still the injury done remains, and only requires time to develop its fruits. Natives have no patriotism in the sense understood by us; their love is centred in their families, and seldom or never extends beyond their village. It is therefore, comparatively speaking, an easy task to govern them, and the English in India are so few in numbers that self-interest alone should make us strive to to render ourselves popular. It is so easy to do it if the task is undertaken in the right way. Quietness and self-confidence have always great effect on Natives; a few coppers thrown into children works wonders with the parparents and goes the round of the whole village. Stormy and unintelligible abuse the Native associates, and perhaps rightly, with low birth. Watch any Native who affects superiority of position: he invaribly shows it by a quiet, almost absurdly dignified, manner. This is invariably the case, whether, he is a raja or foreman of coolies on eight rupees a month.

Government, owing to a variety of causes, has been obliged to increase the strength of the army in this country, bnt this increase of strength is insignificant compared to what would be developed if all young Englishmen would be careful in their behaviour towards Natives. Every thoughtless action, every disparaging remark, is repeated outside, and the ripple widens and widens. The number of servants who understand English serving in English regiments, is very much larger than most of us imagine, and one such man in a mess room is sufficient to work the evil.

It is no exaggeration to say that if the English were individually popular in the country, we might with perfect equanimity await the arrival of Russia at Jamrud itself, for all we need care.

Digitized by Google

There would be no necessity of support from England: with the population heart and soul on our side, no harm could befall our rule. The Government is undoubtedly popular with the mass; the Native Princes are undoubtedly loyal to the Government; and it remain for Englishmen to make themselves popular with the Natives. This popularity is not dependent, as some would have us believe, on intercourse; we do not believe in real social intercourse when manners and customs are so divergent; sufficient for our purpose if we gain and retain the esteem and sincere respect of the inhabitants.

We should bear in mind that if some Native habits appear disgusting to us, so are many English customs filthy in the eyes of the Natives. The Frenchman has his frog stew and snail soup: to the Chinaman puppy-dogs and earth worms are appetising articles of food: and if these are disgusting to us, our fondness for pig and beer and beef is at least degrading in the eyes of the Natives. To walk over carpets and lie on sofas, and even beds, wearing road soiled boots, is to them piggish, to use utensils in common for eating and drinking is, according to their notion of cleanliness, repulsive; for women to dance with strange men, unnatural and improper. If Natives smell occasionally of bazaar tobacco, it is at least a pure article, and we use and smell tobacco of a much more powerful kind. We laugh at our Aryan brother's notions of speaking and writing English, but what about our own attempts at Hindoostani?

If England were to lose India, few of us doubt that it would be a terrrific blow, not so much on account of the few Englishmen who are living in India itself as on account of the wide-spread ruin it would entail among hundreds of thousands of working men and traders at home, whose livelihood depends on the existence of the Indian market, and who outnumber many fold the paltry English population in this country. The loss of India would mean collapse of trade for many years, the breaking of banks, the loss of income in all directions; and the result must inevitably be wholesale emigration, very probably extending to some millions of the home population: but such a movement would be necessitated by poverty and famine. And poverty and famine on such a wholesale scale mean wholesale riot and disorder, and permanent loss of population is permanent loss of wealth and strength. We do not advocate self-abasement. The Anglo-Saxon race, morally and physically, is undoubtedly the finest in the world, and we should glory in the fact; but it may be weakened or strengthened by our acts, and we should not throw away the chance we all have of enormously strengthening the Government of the country by being individually courteous towards the inhabitants.—M. in the Pioneer.

A MILITARY CHAOS.

(Madras Mail.)

We are glad to see that the Government is taking some steps to remedy the increasing deficiency of British Officers in the Indian Army by throwing open the Staff Corps to all officers of the British Service under twenty-five years of age, wherever their Regiments may be serving. The diminished establishment of officers serving with Native Regiments has still to supply the Staff of the Army, the Commissariat, Transport, and Pay Departments, the Political Department, the Burma Commission and Police and any stray appointments that may turn up from time to time. In fact, exactly the same state of things has come round again that prevailed before the mutiny, only in those days each Regiment or Battalion had from twenty to twenty-five European officers to supply the drain, while now there are only eight. The great argument of Sir Henry Norman and his colleagues, who invented the Staff Corps system, for the reduction of the number of British officers with a Native Regiment, was that under their system the eight British officers would always be present with the Regiment, while under the old régime so many officers were taken away for Staff and Civil employments that virtually there were seldom or never more than eight officers actually present with a Native Corps. But they quite overlooked the fact that officers would always be wanted for the Staff, and for Civil and Political employ, and that there would inevitably be no source of supply except the Native regiments from which to draw them.

Whenever the Government of India wants a man suddenly for a political attaché, or a Police Superintendent, or an Interpreter, or a Magistrate, it goes for him to the cadre of a Native Regiment. There is no resident Civil European population to supply the want. A man is needed who knows the Natives and their language, and there is nowhere else but the Indian Army to get him from. As long as the surplus officers of the old Regiments still remained in the Army the new system worked smoothly enough, for there was no need to withdraw officers from their Regiments to fill other appointments, or if they were so withdrawn, their places were filled up immediately: the reductions of many Regiments of Cavalry and Infantry of the Madras Army also increased the number of surplus officers, and staved off the evil day. But it came at last, and the Government found itself obliged to go back to the old state of things, and to appoint officers of Native Regiments to act in staff appointments, and in Army Departments, retaining their names on the regimental list. For some time an attempt was made to second all such officers, and is still made in a feeble and spasmodic manner.

The last official Madras Army List affords a curious study of the chaos which reigns in the cadres of the British officers of the Madras Native Regiments, and which appears to get worse and worse instead of showing signs of improvement. Out of 298 British officers serving with the Madras Native Army 144, or very nearly half the total number, are absent from their Regiments: many of these are absent on furlough or sick leave, but the majority are serving in other appointments, or with Regiments other than their own. One Regiment, out of ten officers born on its rolls, has three doing duty with it. Another, out of eight officers, has only two present with it: another, with only five officers in its cadre, has one present and four absent. Out of twelve Squadron Commanders in the Cavalry only four are present with their Regiments. Of the thirty-two Regiments of Infantry not one has both its Wing Commanders present with it, and thirteen Regiments have neither of their Wing Commanders present. Nearly everybody is doing duty sub pro tem., or as a temporary measure, in some other Regiment than his own. Officers are perpetually "proceeding on duty at the public expense" from Kamptee to Quilon, or from Belgaum to Burma, to fill up gaps in some other Regiment, while the next week a gap occurs in their own corps which necessitates another officer being posted from Cuttack or Vizagapatam to fill it—also "on duty at the public expense." It speaks volumes for the discipline and training of the Madras army that things go on as smoothly as they do, when most of the superior officers of the army are strangers to each other and to their men.

The old system was certainly far preferable to this: out of the twenty four English officers of a Native Battalion, from one-half to two-thirds were always absent from their Corps on Staff or Civil employ. But we thus had a large reserve of officers in the country, available when needed. When a Regiment was warned for Field Service all its officers had at once to rejoin it, in whatever other way they might be employed. Now, when a Regiment goes on service it has to fill up from half-a-dozen different Regiments. When these Regiments go in their turn, they have to fill up from others; so that the cadre becomes like a sieve, obtaining many officers, but retaining none. Add to this continual change the want of any regular system for regulating the promotion or advancement of the British officers in Native Regiments—for if there is such a system in existence, it is either not acted upon, or else it must be framed on the model of the rules of blind hookey—and it will be admitted that we have some reason for applying to the present state of the cadres of British Officers of Madras Native Regiments the epithet of a Military Chaos.

THE NATIVE OFFICER OF THE PERIOD.

(Madras Mail.)

We hear of many schemes on the tapis for a revised edition of the Native officer of the period. The accepted type is a sycophantic image of Jack Sepoy in finer broad cloth; and without doubt he is too much after the pattern of his men. Their family ties are identical and bound too closely for the interests of discipline. The modern military iconoclast is fertile in his remarks on this subject. In his eyes the present Native officer is useless; he has been weighed and found wanting; he is altogether behind the times, and is deficient in the skill and resource requisite for a model troop or company leader. He next calls loudly for an Indian Sandhurst for the training of the flower of India's nobility, or, in lieu of this, would scatter broadcast direct commissions to the sons of Native gentlemen, to the exclusion of the class from whom the Native officer is at present drawn, namely, those who, through merit and industry, rise from the ranks. In advocating the above system they ignore altogether the claims of the sons and other relatives of generations of Native officers who enter the Army solely on account of the opportunity held out to them of rising themselves to the commissioned classes.

We think, however, there is but little likelihood of the authorities (at any rate in the near future) falling into the grave error of upsetting the existing system, for the simple reason that the sons of the Indian nobility or Native gentlemen are not to be met with in sufficient numbers to fill the vacancies in the commissioned ranks of our large Native army. The wealthy class have certainly not as yet shown such signs of military ardour as to grasp with any eagerness at the position hitherto so prized and coveted by our rank and file. It is, therefore, highly probable that for some years at least we shall have much the same material to work upon unless, indeed, by further inducements, we make the Indian Army more popular. In order to attract a higher class of officer it will be absolutely necessary to raise the present scale of pay and emoluments, making it at least equal to that of the Native Civil Service or Medical Profession; which, in the face of a scanty exchequer, and the ever-falling rupee, is a consummation not likely to be arrived at; for it must be remembered that the Native Army is as much a mercenary as a patriotic one, and that the "almighty dollar" rules the spirit of the soldier as well as of the civilian. And even were this increased outlay sanctioned and the services of Native gentlemen procured, it is doubtful whether we should reap much advantage, for with a small additional expenditure European officers would be always forthcoming. In the absence of any prospect of immediate change what we should strive to do is to make the most of a body of men who, with all their faults or the faults of our system, have yet many virtues and much to recommend them—possessing, as they no doubt do, the necessary qualifications for trustworthy subordinates. Decisive steps should not be taken without weighing the consequences. Were we to strike too quickly at our present system of promotion from the ranks, it would have the effect of making the Native Army very unpopular, and a large number of aspirants would fall back disappointed and regretful on their pensions, with, it must be allowed, a very tangible grievance. In fact, if such a measure became law, the Native soldier, hitherto inspired with an ambition to rise, would have his career prematurely cut short, and would naturally look upon such an innovation (as indeed would most of his countrymen) as very shabby treatment. Sweeping changes, like earthquakes, shake the confidence of men, and the above measure, if carried out, would cause a feeling of insecurity in the ranks as to the next movement that might injure their interests.

The problem before us is, therefore, to make the Native officer of the period in every respect thoroughly efficient. To accomplish this we must discard all the traditions of the past. The system under which he has long groaned, one of irresponsible subserviency, must be reformed. A position of trust (and a Native officer's is such, if we read aright the terms of his commission) requires a sense of responsibility and a thorough self-reliance in the conduct of his several duties. He must learn this lesson as well as his drill, and if it cannot be impressed on him he is unfitted for his post. To be at the beck and call of, and to have to consult a European officer, as to every trivial circumstance connected with his company, or to be afraid to lift a finger or give a word of command without a distinct order on the subject, is more the duty of an automaton than of a responsible servant. How, under such conditions, can a man feel the self-respect his rank betokens; how can he impress on his inferiors that sense of awe the power of command inspires? Give the same man more latitude (within due bounds) and the case is altered. His self-respect is assured, he is no longer a puppet in the eyes of his men, he is an officer in being as well as in name. The Commander-in-Chief in his latest order on Tactical Instruction struck unconsciously perhaps the keynote of reformation in this respect. He says:—"In the absence of European officers, squadrons and companies are to be entrusted, for exercise and instruction, to the care of Native officers." "On the termination of the training, Commanding Officers will note and report any special zeal or intelligence displayed by individual Native officers while instructing their men."

We believe from internal evidence that in regiments where the spirit of responsibility is carefully inculcated in the Native commissioned ranks, the Native officer of the period has little to be found fault with, and were the above system to be more generally adopted, we think we should hear fewer complaints of widespread inefficiency, and there would certainly be fewer outcries for reform.

BENGAL.

THE Calcutta water-supply, which of late has attracted so much attention, has at last come to a head. The local Corporation on Saturday last in a Town Council appointed a committee to consider the causes of the deficient supply of water, and to suggest remedies. The committee consists, besides the Chairman, of Colonel Neill, Mr. Spring, and half-a-dozen Native Commissioners.

AN attempt to promote European education in Shillong has not proved a success. The boys' school, which was closed at the end of last year, is now to be followed by the mixed school for girls and small boys, which, it was hoped, would take the place of the separate institutions. The small attendance of day scholars, and the diminishing number of boarders, was taken as evidence that the schools were not desiderated by the class of residents for whom they were intended, and whose needs were met to a certain extent by private schools at Shillong. Parents who aspire to a better education for their boys have it in their power to send them to Darjiling or some other approved hill station on scholarships which have been established with that view.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, in his Resolution on the report of the Chittagong Division for the year 1886–87, observes with satisfaction that the orders of the Government with regard to the number of Mahomedans employed in Government service have received proper attention, and he is also glad to learn that an increased determination on the part of the Mahomedans not to linger behind their contemporaries in the matter of education has been generally observed throughout the division. With regard to the employment of Mahomedans in Orissa, the Commissioner of the Division is of opinion that in the inferior service the number of Mahomedans is sufficient, but that more Mahomedans should be appointed on the occurrence of vacancies in the superior service when qualified men are available It appears probable that the required number of educated Mahomedans will soon be found, for the percentage of Mussulmans at school as compared with Hindus is greater than the percentage of population, and already the Mahomedans are able to hold their own with the Hindus in the departmental examinations. If the Mahomedans can do this in a backward province like Orissa, it should encourage their co-religionists to renewed efforts elsewhere.

Two cases of kidnapping coolie women for work in tea gardens in Assam, under most revolting circumstances, have come to light. In one instance, it is alleged, that a young widow who came down from Hooghly to bathe in the Ganges, was decoyed by a recruiter under pretence of taking her to her brother in the Burra Bazaar, whereas she was put into a hackney carriage and taken to the Coolie Depot, whence she was sent to Dhubri. Here, at the time of the drawing up of the contract, she was not brought before the inspecting officer, but gagged and kept in a hut, and her name altered to prevent identification. The second case occurred under still more painful circumstances. A respectable Khettry widow, a native of Gya, left her home owing to a family dispute about the inheritance of her deceased husband's property. A recruiter took charge of her on the pretence of introducing her to a lawyer in Calcutta who would move the High Court in her favour. She was unaware of the trick that was being played upon her till she left Dhubri in the steamer. During the entire journey and afterwards she refused food and drink. She has since been inconsolable, and her intellect is deranged. A pleader at Debroogarh has taken up the two cases, and the Deputy Commissioner has instituted inquiries into the allegations made by the women.

MADRAS.

THE P. and O. steamer Khedive arrived in the Madras Roads on Saturday evening from London, and landed a large party of Missionaries, who have come out as Special Missioners during the Winter Session. Their field of labour will be the Madras Presidency.

THE representative assembly of Mysore, which is the creation of the late distinguished Rangacharlu's political genius, appears to have considerable moral courage. It has requested the Maharajah to resign his annual trip to Ootacamund and repair instead to another sanitarium, Nundidroog, which is in his Highness's own dominions. The recommendation of the assembly is based on financial grounds.

ON November 30, 1886, an Act called the Local Authorities Loan Act was passed by the Madras Legislative Council, and subsequently received the assent of the Governor, for the purpose of enabling local authorities to guarantee interest on, or to create a fund for repayment of, capital expended on certain purposes. This Act was forwarded for the assent of the Governor-General, but as, upon a reference to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State, his lordship has expressed himself unable to sanction the provision by which a Government guarantee might be added to the guarantee of the local authority, his Excellency the Governor-General has been unable to give his assent to the Act. At the same time the Secretary of State and the Government of India have concurred in suggesting that revised legislation might be undertaken to enable a local authority to charge its fund by way of guarantee on its own security alone, and as the principle of an additional guarantee by Government is not a necessary part of the measure it has been struck out, and another Bill, in other respects resembling the previous one, has been prepared, which is to be introduced by the Hon. H. E. Stokes, at the next meeting of the Madras Legislative Council.

H.E. THE GOVERNOR OF MADRAS gave his first public breakfast since his return to Madras for the season in the Banqueting Hall of Government House last week. A large number of gentlemen attended the breakfast, and his Excellency afterwards gave personal interviews to those who had expressed a wish to see him in private. The Madras Times remarks:—"The absence of all stiffness and formality is the special charm of these breakfasts; and his Excellency has done wisely and well in reviving a custom which makes him accessible to those who may desire to speak with him in private. A Governor gains nothing by being unapproachable; whilst by making himself accessible to ordinary mortals he may acquire useful knowledge on many points, besides benefiting numbers of people, and his dignity withal will moult no feather."

BOMBAY.

THE HON. F. L. LATHAM, who returned to Bombay by the last mail steamer, has resumed charge of the office of Advocate-General at Bombay.

A telegram just received from Hong Kong states that the total number of bales of Indian yarn sold during the previous fortnight amounted to 6,300; and Exchange on Bombay was quoted at Rs. 223¾ per 100 dollars; market quieter and prices slightly lower. In Bombay the yarn market has a downward tendency, in consequence.

IT is announced that the Nizam has sanctioned a grant of four-and-a-half lakhs of rupees for Education this year in his Dominions, in addition to the funds to be raised by cess on the land revenue, of which two pies per rupee are to be devoted to Primary Education. This cess is estimated to yield a further sum of between seventy-five and eighty thousand rupees from those districts alone which had been surveyed and settled. What an advance this is on the miserable and altogether unworthy expenditure which was formerly devoted to educational purposes in Hyderabad!

THE Deccan Times says that Major Robertson has to return to Mysore early next month, as the post of First Assistant Resident, Hyderabad, was promised to Mr. Forbes, M.C.S., who is now on his way out from England. It is most unfortunate, remarks our contemporary, that the Viceroy could not see his way to retaining Major Robertson in his post. He has got to know the people, and is most popular with all classes. His departure will be greatly regretted by all, from his Highness and the Resident downwards.

AT a meeting of the Bombay Municipal Corporation, Dr. Blaney brought forward a proposal for the extension of the market accommodation of this city, which was unanimously accepted by the Corporation. His proposition was that among the proposals to be submitted to the Corporation for the sanction of the Market Extension Loan, due consideration should be given by the Town Council for making provision for increasing the accommodation of the Bhuleshwar Market and the Arthur Crawford Fish Market, and for erecting a line of shops over the northern arcade of the Crawford Market. Dr. R. N. Khory next proposed that the Town Council be requested to consider the propriety of its continuing the Municipal contribution towards the cost of the maintenance of the Jaffer Sulleiman Dispensary from the 31st March next. The proposition having been seconded by Dr. Cawasji Hormusji, was carried nem. con.

NORTH WEST PROVINCES, OUDH AND PUNJAB.

THE Great Eastern Hotel at Allahabad has been purchased by Raja Rampal Singh, of Ramdur, for thirty thousand rupees.

THE ceremonial opening of "The Dufferin Bridge" over the Ganges, at Benares, by his Excellency the Viceroy, will take place at noon on Dec. 16th—a déjeuner to follow. A special train will run from Lucknow to Benares on the previous day, returning the next. The occasion is a considerable one, and the gathering will be large.

COLONEL A. M. LANG, R.E., Secretary to the North-West Government in the Department of Public Works, has reached the end of his term of service. He has been succeeded by by Colonel D. Ward, R.E., who has been holding the corresponding appointment in the Central Provinces. Colonel Lang remains in India another year, visiting Cashmir next summer. His career both as soldier and civilian, and especially as a soldier, says the Allahabad paper, has been equally distinguished and honourable, and the loss of his service to the State, whilst still in the prime of physical and mental vigour, is a thing to be much regretted.

FOLLOWING the example of Sir Rivers Thompson, Sir Alfred Lyall has had drawn up an official memorandum of his administration, which will be published very shortly. The Pioneer says that it contains the following passage regarding the revenue administration of the North-West Provinces:—"The revenue derived from land is much larger in the North-Western Provinces and Oudh than in any other separately governed province in India; the systems of assessment and collection are complete and elaborate, and they are intimately connected with the relations between the landlords and tenants; with the irrigation of a large area by a canal system that is perhaps the largest in the world; and with other economical matters of great interest to the country. It is, therefore, a matter of great satisfaction that the detailed administration of such an important branch of the government of these provinces shall have been for the past five years, as previously, in the hands of a body of civil officers whose proved ability and high appreciation of their duties have always been of great service to the public interests, and merit the cordial acknowledgments of the Government."

BURMA.

THE Upper-Burma Secretariat, with the exception of the Public Works Branch, which, for special reasons, it has been decided to locate for the present in Mandalay, has been transferred to Rangoon. For the future the distinction between the Upper Burma and the Lower Burma Secretariats, except in the case of the Public Works Branch, is to cease, and the headquarters of the administration of the whole province is to be in Rangoon.

TOUNGWINGYI reports tell of a successful little action against dacoits on the 5th November. Jemadar Mir Fayyaz Ali, with a party of mounted infantry belonging to the 33rd Bengal Infantry, attacked 150 dacoits in the jungle twelve miles south-east of Minyna. The Jemadar's party was only thirteen strong, but he succeeded in routing the enemy, killing two, wounding six, and capturing fourteen guns, some dahs, and other property.

THE carved ivory chair, which was made by Moung Moon Htsaw, the Moulmain forester, for presentation to King Theebaw, but which as it took two years to complete, was not ready before his deposition, is now on view at Rangoon, whence it will be sent to England to the Imperial Institute. Few handsomer articles than this chair, which took twenty-five elephants' tusks to complete, have ever been seen in Rangoon. As usual, however, with Burmese articles, it has been finished badly. The seat is composed of common brocaded silk fastened with brass tacks! The carving is worth many thousands of rupees as a curiosity, and it is said that Mr. Galstin, who now possesses it, has already refused Rs. 5,000 for it.

THE most interesting of the Burmese forest products, which came before the Chemical Examiner in Burma last year, was the wood of Artocarpus integrifolia, which yields a fast yellow dye much used by the Natives. It may be extracted by boiling the wood with water, but more conveniently with alcohol. As thus prepared it is a resin resembling the colouring matter of turmeric. The leaf of the teak tree when crushed yields a red dye which dissolves in alkalies, forming a blue or violet solution. It is a mixture of two or more substances. The colour is principally due to a crimson body which may be separated from the others by ether, which dissolves it. It forms insoluble compounds with lead and baryta. The nim tree, used as a febrifuge in India, yields a resin which appears to be the active principle. The examination of it is not finished.

NATIVE PRESS.

THE NIZAM'S GIFT.

Before accepting this offer of the Nizam the English Government ought to have carefully considered what the Indian Mahomedans will think? The reply of the Viceroy in accepting the offer is a stain on the Governmant, and gives cause for apprehension. The Viceroy says:—"Your Highness is the first to set an example in this direction, and for this example the Governments of India and England offer you their thanks." In making this assertion the Viceroy has given hints to other Princes of India to follow the Nizam's example. This is not worthy of the representative of the Empress of this extensive dominion. We fear that other Indian Princes may pour their wealth at the feet of the English Government without being mindful of the welfare of their own territory and thereby enhance the difficulties of their subjects.—Bangabasi.

We are pleased with the loyalty of the Nizam. We beg to thank him for the disinterestedness he has shown. The Nizam has offered to pay sixty lakhs of rupees to the British Government in three years. But we have already said, and even now say, and will for ever say, that the British Government ought to remain satisfied with the loyalty and respect of the Nizam. There is no necessity for taking sixty lakhs of rupees from the small treasury of his Highness. Sixty lakhs of rupees would do great good to the Nizam's territory, but will be of no benefit to British India. What will twenty lakhs do for him whom eighty crores do not suffice? Lord Dufferin has written a letter to the Nizam offering thanks. His Lordship has praised the Nizam for taking the initiative in this direction. For this, what Native of India is there that will not feel happy? Now the expression of gratitude has displayed the magnanimity of the British Government. But an expression of gratitude after the acceptance of the gift does nor display the same amount of magnanimity. The treasury will not be filled if all the Native Princes follow the example of the Nizam. The example ought not to be followed. There is not a single Native Prince in India who will not follow the example of the Nizam with a view to secure the good grace of the English. But the condition of all States is not good. This Lord Dufferin knows better than anybody else. If the Princes become generous and open-handed, then their subjects will be oppressed, and the progress of their country will be checked. Even for the sake of policy this offer of the Nizam should not be accepted.—The Sahachar

AYUB KHAN.

There is no news of Ayub. The spies, followers, and soldiers of Abdur are going about on all sides to capture him; they are making search in mountain-glens, in river beds, and in deserts, but no one was able to find any trace of him. Ayub is here, Ayub is yonder; but Ayub is nowhere to be found. The son of Shere will not be easily caught. He failed in his attempt to escape in 1885; this time he has not left his place of confinement without much forethought and provision of means and machinery. During his confinement at Teheran he was kept under strict surveillance. Gradually the guards relaxed their vigilance; and, indeed, who would trouble his head for another with the same strain of anxiety for ever? The son of Shere was once thwarted because he tried to accomplish his purpose at one stroke. He will not be thwarted again in a hurry. During his captivity he despatched letters and messages on all sides. Where is the place in which his friends and emissaries are not to be found? It is impossible to say how long the machinations went on. Perhaps the Persian Government lent its assistance to the escape; perhaps the Persian Government was influenced by the coaxings of Russia. Even if there were no direct assistance, there was certainly an indifference amounting to indirect aid, and on this ground the English began to manifest their displeasure. On the other hand the Russians were not behindhand as regards words of mouth. "God is witness, we have had no connection, not even in the slightest degree, with the escape of Ayub." They had to cry aloud with such solemn protestations. The Russians are powerful; the Persians are weak; the English are always more hostile towards the weak. Consequently the Persians had to be very cautious. They have to pander to the wishes of both parties. Russia must be kept contented, and yet so that the English may remain satisfied. The whole charge fell upon the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and he has been deposed from office. But there is no trace of Ayub Khan. He is not such a coward as to remain concealed in one place for fear of death. This time his determination is "either my body shall fall, or my purpose shall be accomplished." Ayub and Yacoob have many well-wishers, who can tell what dreadful fire Ayub is trying to kindle in secret? All the world knows that the son of Shere, Ayub Khan, the hero of Kandahar, does not fear death. Can he longer waste his time in a state of confinement? This was his final attempt. There is no means of predicting what the end shall be; and there is not a wise man in the human commonwealth who can decipher the letters of the decrees of Fate. Ayub's destiny is Abdur's destiny. We are placed on a shoreless sea when we try to think what relation Russia and England will bear to each other with reference to the final end of Abdur.—Shahachar.

DACOITS IN BURMA.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—The public in England must be surprised that dacoity has not been suppressed in Burma. The explanation is easy. We have forgotten the lesson taught our ancestors 140 years ago by General Wade in Scotland.

The Government, the District Officers, and the Public in Burma have all alike been oblivious.

The Government, because it is so occupied with two grand railroads that it cannot attend to the duty of cutting wide roads through the dense jungle.

The District Officers, because Government will not trust them with money, but overwhelmns them with unnecessary routine work.

The Public because they are so accustomed to travel by water that they forget the use of their legs.

There are two routes of very great importance which ought to have been constructed last year.

1st. From Arracan to the Irawadi river.

2nd. From Assam to Upper Burma.

1st. The road from the great Port of Akyab in Arracan, or rather from Yongakyoung in Hunter's Bay to Memboo on the Irawadi, either by the Aeng (or Talak) Pass.

A slight sketch of this route may induce better-informed correspondents to give a full description.

Aeng was formerly a place of importance on account of the trade between Arracan and Upper Burma; is it for the British nation, so famous for mercantile enterprise, to prevent the revival of this trade?

The country surrounding Aeng is very fertile; the merchants of London well know what quantities of Necranzie rice come from Akyab.

From Aeng the road can be easily remade to Sarowah, fifteen miles, which lies 147 feet above the sea. From Sarowah to the summit of the Pass Naraingam, 4,664 feet above sea, is a distance of eighteen miles, and the gradients ought to be made more easy under the superintendence of askilful engineer.

From Naraingam to Rhang-Khyong is a descent of eight miles; thence to Napeh on the Ma river, which, I think, was occupied by one of our columns early in the year.

From Napeh to Memboo on the Irawadi is thirty-eight miles, which track ought to be carefully raised and metalled with a breadth of 100 yards of cleared jungle on each side.

2nd. The other road which ought to be immediately constructed is from the English settlement at Seebsagar in Assam to the Chindwin river, a distance of 100 miles, half of which road should be constructed by the Government of Assam, and half by the Chief Commissioner of Burma. For a description of this route I beg to refer to Allen's Indian Mail of December 29, 1885.

—Your obedient servant,

December 6. T.

A COMPLETE edition of Sir Alfred Lyall's speeches, up to and including the address at the recent University Convocation, is being published in Urdu by a well-known Lucknow Press. The little volume, which contains a portrait of the Lieutenant-Governor, will be freely and widely distributed.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

A system, under which the most momentous issues, affecting not only the welfare, but, not infrequently, the very existence, of the State, are practically left to the decision of its most incompetent members—those, too, who have the smallest stake in it—is, to the eye of common sense, more ridiculous than the harmless annual farce of allowing a few half-trained Scotch schoolboys to choose—ostensibly for political reasons, which most of them are utterly incapable of appreciating—the Rector of the University to which they are affiliated; va sans dire that it is infinitely dangerous instead of being only absurd. Yet it is with this system, with the supremacy of Demos, the rule of the unfittest, that we now stand face to face. If it be a hard task to "educate a party," what are to say of the undertaking to "educate," in a political sense, more than half a nation? This problem Mr. Mallock makes an effort to solve in his article, "Go ye and teach"—certainly the most noteworthy in the present issue of the "National"—and he well defines it as the "making an enormous multitude understand fairly an enormous variety of facts." This he wisely proposes to do by the wide circulation of tersely and vigorously worded leaflets, with diagrams illustrating the absurdity of the statements habitually—and we fear, too often with a full knowledge that they are false—made by Gladstonians. The "enormous number of rich men," the "vast income of the landholders, compared with the gross income of the nation," with many others, are texts on which vast torrents of nonsensical loquacity have been poured forth. Mr. Mallock takes each as the heading of a leaflet intended to make plain to any man of ordinary intelligence what are the real, incontrovertible facts of the case. Nor is Mr. Mallock by any means a novice in this matter; for, as he tells us (p. 492), he has already used similar diagrams as valuable illustrations to public lectures on political topics.

Among the most important of the subjects on which the average elector needs information is the matter called "fair trade," that is, the modification of our fiscal system in such a manner that the cost of production may, where possible, remain in the country, instead of going out of it never to return; in other words, that an enormous sum be paid to our own people instead of to foreigners. If some such change be pre-eminently necessary as regards any one class of products, it is so as regards those known as "agricultural." "Nothing," as has been well said, "can prevent the land going out of tillage but higher prices." The eighteen millions of people dependent on agriculture, if once united, could make a brave show at the polling-booths, and could turn the scale at many an election. Let not Conservatives be blind to the fact that the "Old Parliamentary Hand" is well aware of the latent power which a sudden declaration from him in favour of even a small duty on the import of food stuffs would array in his favour. He is "deep, sir, deep, and devilish sly." Mr. Harris' "Reply to Lord Randolph Churchill," who sneers at fair trade, and Mr. Albert Mott's instructive paper on "English Farms and the Price of Food" will both be found replete with information on this momentous topic. May we hope that the "practical Tory Administration," whose successes Mr. Baden-Powell so worthily records, may find some means of giving aid where aid is so much needed! In his article on "Irish Land Purchase" Mr. George Holloway, the Conservative member for Mid-Gloucester, proposes the nominal sale, by the landlord to the tenant, of the land, subject to a mortgage, of which a portion, with the interest which has accrued on the outstanding principal, is to be paid off yearly. Nothing succeeds like success; and Mr. Holloway tells us (p. 519) that he has tried this plan with success in England. In Ireland he would invoke the (undesirable) intervention of the Government, who would receive and invest in Consols, the payments on account of principal until the whole purchase-money should have been paid up. How far some such plan may be practicable when the lapse of half Lord Salisbury's twenty years of steady and firm Government may have taught the Irish peasant the respective values of meum and tuum, it would be premature to say. For the present we can approve it only as an abstraction.

The reprieve from lamentable intestine commotions—certain to occur sooner or later—with which France has, within the last few days, been blessed, enables the mind to dwell with less immediate anxiety on the condition of that sorely-tried country. But it cannot be concealed that—as Lady Verney shows in a very interesting article—the peasantry of the Republic are in much the same condition as they were when Arthur Young visited France a century ago. The agriculturist is still harrassed by the ridiculous subdivision of the holdings, which in some cases do not exceed twelve feet in width (p. 562), recalling, as the able writer remarks, the Chinese ideal where—teste Alfred de Musset, on each side, "ou entend le voisin se moucher." When we bear in mind, that the proportion of the agricultural to the other classes of the community is incomparably greater in France than in England, it will be seen what a "root of bitterness," and of future political mischief, the universal distress of the peasantry and of the small farmers contains.

We are rejoiced to find the subject of "Slipshod English" taken up; "I. G. S." calls our attention—none too soon—to a style of writing which is rapidly debasing an exceptionally flexible and assimilative language; a style against which Coleridge and De Quincy repeatedly protested. The writer, who has given a few striking specimens of really bad English (culled from leading journals and from prominent works) might easily have doubled the length of his article without exhausting the matter at his disposal.

Macaulay's inveterate tendency to sacrifice accuracy to effect has been repeatedly exposed. Mr. H. G. Keene, in his excellent "History of Hindustan," and (even more pointedly) Sir James Stephen, have pretty nearly demolished every "fact" in the well-known Essay on "Warren Hastings." And it is notorious that Macaulay's ferocious onslaught on Croker's "Boswell's Johnson" was the result of personal enmity to Croker (who, by the way, had, as "Mr. Bigby," figured unfavourably in Disraeli's works of fiction). "I will dust the varlet's jacket in the next Blue and Yellow," were the words uttered by the brilliant writer after a speech of Croker's in the House, which portended the coming storm. Mr. Coker Adams now endeavours to show that the Essay on Madame D'Arblay is the outcome of ill-feeling towards the same antagonist; and his paper will be a valuable contribution towards a work "On the Quarrels of Literary Men."

JOHN BUNYAN.*

It may be safely asserted beyond all chance of contradiction that there is not a single individual in the British Isles with the least pretence to education alike in the palace as in the cottage who has not read "The Pilgrim's Progress." Alike amongst the rich as amidst the poor it retains its hold as one of the most charming productions of the human imagination. Edition after edition is poured forth, some illustrated, some condensed, some with explanatory notes, some plain and unalloyed, but all eagerly purchased by a public who never seem satiated with Bunyan's religious allegory. Even in the humblest ranks of society one work is as popular as any melodramatic novel; in the parish library the volume is always in rags and tatters, thumb-marked, torn, soiled with the dirt of many an unwashed hand, chapter after chapter showing signs of careful perusal and earnest examination; need it be said that it is the "Pilgrim's Progress." Nor is the admiration for the singularly fascinating and touching appeal to the better instincts of human nature confined to the young or the old, to man or woman, to son or daughter, to husband or wife; it is common to all society. Wherever the race of mankind flourishes there will Bunyan be an honoured guest. In America, in Asia, in Africa, in Europe, amidst the islanders of the Pacific, the Celestials of the Chinese Empire, the wild savages of Ashantee, the familiar names of Christian, the Worldly Wiseman, Simple, Sloth, Presumption, Talkative, Evangelist, and the such-like, fall on the astonished ear of the astonished traveller.

Yet with all this, how many persons could give the barest outline as to Bunyan's life? How often could a person be found able to say offhand that he, the author of "Pilgrim's Progress," was a Nonconformist parson in Bedford, born in 1628; that he lived for sixty years, and wrote a like number of works? That he was left for twelve years in prison, consequent upon his refusal to modify his religious principles? That he died in London while on a visit, and was buried in Bunhill Fields? Still fewer could, of course, allege with truth, that they were even aware that Bunyan wrote any other work than the one known wherever the star of civilisation has brought light and intelligence to the human race. Still, there is no reason for this want of knowledge. Dr. Brown's biography in itself should dispel such a mist of ignorance; and that in a measure it has fulfilled its mission is indicated by the appearance of the third edition. Criticism in these circumstances seem somewhat out of place, the public having already passed their judgment. What need of comment by a reviewer? It would not be fair, however, to withhold the meed of praise which is due to the painstaking author. Himself a successor of the pastor whose life and labours he has recorded, he has avoided the hazardous rock of ecclesiastical principles. He portrays the man as he was, leaving others to pass judgment upon his dissent. There are no sneers about Church and State; no gibes and flaunts anent the Bench of Lords Spiritual. A temperate work, it will be read by temperate men with pleasure and satisfaction, and its perusal will add pleasure to the re-perusal—perhaps for the twentieth time—of the most exquisite book in the English language—"Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress."

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF MARIA V. G. HAVERGAL.†

The Havergals were a remarkable family. The father, Canon Havergal, was, to quote the language of the Church Standard, "no ordinary man. He was rich in grace, as well as rich in gifts. 'Who could see him and not love him?' asked a brother pastor, his friend for many years." Then his daughter, Frances Ridley Havergal, was still more remarkable and even more lovable. If ever an angel came down from the skies in human shape and form it was when this devout Christian saw the light of day. It would be difficult to analyse the adoration and fond affection which this lady inspired into the hearts and souls of her fellow-creatures. Perhaps, however, it would not be very wide of the mark to assert that she lived in the past, she will to the end of time live in the futurs, as the authoress of the most exquisite hymns which the English tongue has produced; Frances Havergal is, to our judgment, the only writer of this century whose sacred poems contain poetry, sweetness, devotion, and the power to stir the soul! Again, again, and again, they are read and re-read, but they never pale; they never produce a sensation of weariness.

Maria Havergal, whose memoirs are now before us, had the misfortune to be overshadowed by her more talented sister; yet, withal, she was a noble woman, fearless in the cause which she took in hand, as devout a Christian as ever appeared amidst the daughters of Eve. We have said fearless—aye, too fearless! Fancy a strange lady walking into a strange cottage and boldly proclaiming that the husband was no husband, that it was a family of sin, its members outcasts from the pale of righteousness and propriety! Some might deem such a proceeding as indiscreet, and the charge could scarcely be denied; but enthusiasm, especially in the cause of sacredness and religion, never is regulated by the cold formality of logic; as the spring gushes so do the bubbles float to the surface. A calm, unimpassioned, calculating mind never leads, but always follows. The Havergals were meant for higher work; they were champions of Christianity, and nobly did they play their part on the stage of life. Each and all live in the memories of mankind, heroes and heroines of faith, spotless, unblamable. Who can doubt that their reward is assured. Their life is their monument, their deeds their epitaph!

DHULIP SING'S PORTRAIT.

AN extraordinary story comes from the Punjab to the effect that in the city of Lahore certain Sikhs lately assembled to celebrate an anniversary of their religion, when a large photograph of Dhulip Sing, with lighted candles at each side, was placed in front of the shrine or tomb in whose honour the worshippers had gathered together. The case has been published in detail in several of the Native papers, but it does not appear that any official notice has been taken of the circumstance by the Local or Supreme Government. The omission to do this has called forth a remonstrance from the leading English paper of the Punjab which, admitting that is a sound principle of Government, and trebly sound in India, the land of conflicting creeds and fanatical passions, that no interference shall be made by the authorities in any matter of religion except for valid reasons of law, morality, or policy, is yet of opinion that in the present case official notice should be taken of the offence, and that a mild but firm reproof should be meted out to the offenders. The principal of these offenders was the Raja of Faridkote, one of the Cis-Sutlej Chiefs, as at the assembly in question the reception of the representative of the Rajah was the chief formality of the occasion; and there can be no doubt that the display of Dhulip Sing's portrait illuminated in a place of religious honour was not an accident, or intended as a compliment to British rule in the Punjab. But it may be open to argument whether the Government would act wisely in taking any serious notice of the proceeding. If noticed it would have to be done so in a serious and fitting manner, and not in the half-and-half way recommended by the Civil and Military Gazette, which thinks that because the Raja of Faridkote has a fair grievance against Sir Charles Aitchison's Administration of some years' standing, and because the Sikhs are split up about a religious controversy amongst themselves, the Government "should incline towards leniency, but that leniency must be shown in a manner unmistakably indicative of severity should the offence be repeated in any other form." Now, if the offence was one of "palpable implied sedition," as our Indian contemporary holds that it was, it will hardly do to proclaim simply that it must not be repeated. If, as more likely, that it was an intended impertinence by the Raja of Faridkote, that small ruler can be dealt with by the Local Government in a certain quiet way which all the chiefs of the Punjab thoroughly understand. They recognise willingly the velvet glove on the hand of British authority in that Province, but they know also that the hand is one of iron when it strikes. To publicly proclaim by a Government notification that Imperial offence had been taken at this matter would be to make too little of British authority, and too much of Dhulip Sing. It would be certain to be misunderstood, as showing anxiety, if not fear, concerning him or his movements, which misunderstanding, accompanied by wilful misinterpretation, would go to quarters where the stability of British rule in the Punjab must neither be doubted nor misunderstood. There is no fear of the loyalty of the Sikhs to that rule faltering in the least. Should a day of trial come in the future they will be found as faithful to us then as they were in the Mutiny when they fought and conquered shoulder to shoulder with British troops. They deride the name and character of Dhulip Sing as being of any representative power with them, and they laugh his pretensions to scorn. If there are a few fanatics and a discontented chief who choose to do puja to his photograph they are not of a class that the great British power need trouble itself in rebuking or punishing. They may safely be left to the tender mercies of the ordinary Lahore policeman.

IT has now been decided that No. 4 Battery, 1st Brigade, Lancashire Division, Royal Artillery, now at Pyinmana, Upper Burma, will not be withdrawn from Burma in the early part of 1888, but will be quartered in Rangoon, on relief of No. 6 Battery, 1st Brigade, Southern Division, under orders for Bombay; and that No. 2 Battery, 1st Brigade, Eastern Division, now located at Delhi, will be sent to Thayetmyo, near to the old frontier of Upper Burma, until such time as accommodation is available for it at Rangoon.

AT a general court-martial assembled at Chakrata, on the 17th October, Private Cornelius Sullivan, of the 4th Battalion the Rifle Brigade, was arraigned on the charge of striking his superior officer, being in the execution of his office, in that at Chakrata, on the 14th August, 1887, he repeatedly struck, on the face and on the body, with a spade, Corporal Samuel Davies, of the same battalion, his superior officer, and in the execution of his office. The court found the prisoner guilty of the charge, and sentenced him to penal servitude for the term of five years, and to be discharged with ignominy from Her Majesty's service.

THE 2nd Cavalry, Hyderabad Contingent, stationed at Aurungabad, has received orders to march to Poona, to arrive on 29th December next, to take part in the manœuvres under his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief.

IT has been decided that officers employed in the Burma Military Police, and in other appointments of a similar nature, where they have no opportunity of passing the qualifying examination for promotion, are not, if fitted for promotion in all other respects, to be passed over for regimental promotion, but are to be promoted provisionally, subject to their passing the required tests on the first available opportunity after their return to military duty.

THE 6th and 19th Madras Infantry have been ordered to Upper Burma in relief of the 14th and 17th Madras Infantry, and will probably embark for Burmah in December and January respectively.

THE 2nd Battalion Cheshire Regiment, which is expected to arrive at Mandalay about the 25th November, will be distributed as follows: Shwebo: Head-quarters and two companies; Bernardmyo, two companies; Bhamo, four companies.

A LARGE body of the Burma Police Force raised at Agra arrived in Calcutta on the 17th inst. and embarked for Rangoon the following evening in the Chuprah. Strength—one British officer, eleven native officers, one native surgeon, 500 men, and twenty followers.

A SUM of Rs. 16,69,926 was paid during the year 1886-7 as compensation for dearness of food to Native troops and followers. Of this amount Rs. 446,983 was paid in Bombay, Rs. 6,58,993 in Madras, and Rs. 5,63,950 in Bengal. The compensation to the native cavalry for dearness of forage reached during the year, Rs. 2,73,646, Bengal paying Rs. 80,583 and Bombay the balance.

OWING to a case of cholera in the King's Dragoon Guards at Lawrencepore the troops still on the march have been halted.

GENERAL NAIRNE arrived at Mooltan on the 18th under a salute of nine guns, and left again on the 19th. The new defensible post here did not appear to impress him any more than it did any other distinguished visitor.

WE believe that the 2nd Battalion Gloucester Regiment will come to Bombay, instead of the Lancashire Fusiliers, as previously ordered. The Dublin Fusiliers are to proceed to Nuseerabad instead of to Ahmednugger, where the Lancashire Fusiliers are to be stationed.

ORDERS have been issued for the band and a full company of the 2nd Battalion East Yorkshire Regiment to proceed to Ahmedabad next month for the purpose of attending the Durbar to be held by his Excellency the Governor on the 16th December.

COMMANDANTS of Mounted Infantry in Lower Burma are to be allowed the use of two pony chargers, provided they forego any horse allowance they may be drawing as a separate item; or in cases where they keep two suitable ponies of their own, are to be allowed double horse allowance, with retrospective effect, the horse allowance being, however, inclusive of any horse allowance they may be drawing as a separate item under rule.

COLONEL TOKER is acting for Colonel Collen as Military Secretary during the latter's two months' leave to England.

I. M. S. "CLIVE."—The Indian Marine steamer Clive, Commander B. P. Creagh, arrived in harbour on Sunday, from Rangoon, with the officers and men of the 1st Battalion K.O. Yorkshire Light Infantry. S.; Apoths. Lyons and Summers.

A JOURNEY IN CENTRAL ASIA.

At the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society at Burlington House, recently, a paper by Mr. A. D. Carey, on a "Journey round Chinese Turkestan and along the northern frontier of Thibet," was read by Mr. A. E. Carey, M.Inst, C.E. (brother of the author). The President, General Sir R. Strachey, occupied the chair.

The writer stated that in the latter part of May, 1885, he left Simla intending to spend two years' leave of absence in carrying out a long-cherished scheme of travelling on the frontiers of Northern Thibet. His plan was to reach Turkestan by the route through the uninhabited track of Thibet lying between Rudokh and Polu. At Kailang he was joined by Mr. Ney Elias, British Commissioner in Ladakh, also bound for Turkestan, and at Leh he found Mr. Dalgleish, whose services he had secured as Turki interpreter and assistant for the trip. He left Tanksé on Aug. 12, with a caravan of thirty-one men and forty-nine ponies, and reached the Mangtza Lake, whence they struck the road between Rudokh and Polu. "The existence of the Polu road from India was entirely unknown to the Chinese authorities at Kiria, and the news of our arrival appears to have caused some consternation. We were informed that the garrison was called out at midnight, and 200 men were sent half way to Polu, while the commanding officer, with a smaller body of men and several Mahommedan officials, came to Polu on the evening of the 10th, having marched more than fifty miles during the day. The next morning they paid me a visit, saw the passport, and were very cordial and profuse in offers of assistance. The Chinamen spent a day in exploring the road by which we had come down, and before returning to Kiria instructed the villagers that all our wants were to be supplied.

"As the camelmen who had brought our baggage from Khoten were unwilling to enter into a further engagement, and wished to return, we now made efforts to procure fresh carriage. The Dalai declined to give us any assistance, and, after making many frivolous excuses, ended by stating frankly, no doubt with perfect truth, that it was more than his place was worth to allow us to proceed any farther in the direction we had been travelling. I therefore went on to Kuchar and preferred my request to the superior Chinese officials. They were very civil and obliging, but at the same time showed a strong reluctance to sanction any more travelling off the main road. Eventually I carried my point on giving them a written assurance that no responsibility should attach to them in case of any mishap, and contenting myself with a caravan of donkeys—the only animals they declared that could travel in that part of the country. The donkeys supplied were certainly very fine specimens of their kind, but it was not long before we found that they were peculiarly unsuited for the sort of ground we had to traverse.

"From Kiria we went to Khoten, which was a busy manufacturing town. The party of Russian explorers under General Prjevalsky left Khoten for Aksu a few days before his arrival at the former place After crossing the Chiman Tagh range of mountains we attempted the passage of the Kuen Lun range. Here, however, their guide was completely at fault, and after some hours of marching conducted them to the brink of a mighty precipice. Then with dramatic action he threw his sheepskin cap on the ground, struck himself twice on the forehead sat down and wept aloud. It was now of importance to ascertain our exact position, for, although we knew that we were somewhere about the latitude of Naichi, we had no means of fixing our longitude, and with every confidence in Dalgleish's care and skill as a navigator, it was impossible not to feel that we might be much further from Naichi than his dead reckoning showed us to be. For eighty days we had not seen a single human being outside the caravan, and my men we naturally gloomy and dispirited. I find no fault with them for this, as there was good ground for their distrust, and they had had much discomfort and hard work; while all our luxuries having long since been exhausted, flour, tea, and such meat as I could get by shooting was the sole ration. When, therefore, on the 20th July we suddenly came on unmistakable marks of human feet on the soft earth—even the most impassive members of our little company were somewhat excited, while the impulsive Turks threw themselves on the ground, kissed the footprints, and sobbed with delight. There were no more downcast looks now, and soon all in the highest spirits were busily engaged in pitching the tents on a spot where the camp-fires of the party before us were still warm. Our neighbours were pilgrims, several hundreds number from the provinces to the east of Kokonor, who were marching in three detachments to Lhassa. All carried arms of some kind, and were in great dread of a band of robbers believed to be lurking in the vicinity. We were now able to verify our position, and found that we were between the Kuon Lun and Khokosili ranges, and just south of the Angirtakshia Pass.

"I cannot refrain from here recording an act of great and unsolicited kindness shown us at this time by a young Lama who was travelling in company of a Chinaman towards Khorlu. Observing our exhausted condition, he hastened on to Hoiduthara, borrowed a pony, and immediately rode ten miles back to meet us with food. With joyful shouts he first thrust into my hands a bag, made of the paunch of a sheep, full of water, then another small bag containing satu, and a third containing chura. We had then been almost without food for four days, and as may be supposed, never enjoyed a meal more. Considering that we were strangers and quite ignorant of the Mongolian language, and that our ragged and travel-stained appearance was not calculated to excite hopes of much being forthcoming in the way of reward, I was greatly touched by this kindness shown to us at a moment of sore need.

"By the advice of the Mongols we pushed on to Bhaga Tsaidam, and thence to Hoiduthara. The Mongols are a timid people and very poor. But I found them friendly and hospitable, and received from them many acts of kindness. They are extremely suspicious and troublesome to deal with in any matter of business, such as the purchase of stores. Being constantly cheated by the Chinese, they cannot believe that anyone can mean to deal fairly by them, and an immediate assent to their terms or any liberal offer seemed to have the effect of doubling their suspicions, and causing them to raise some fresh obstacle. The town of Sachu is situated in a small but fertile oasis. It is on the right bank of the Danga Gol river, which is crossed by a wooden bridge about 70 yards in length. We were informed that the direct road to Hami lay through a desert in which water was scarce, and were advised to turn east and join the great trunk road between China and Turkestan at Ghainshé or Uainshé, on which rest-houses have been erected where supplies are procurable. Ghainshé is about sixty miles from Sachu. It is a wretched place, very small, and in ruins for the most part. Mud forts, now dismantled and ruinous, were numerous between Sachu and Ghainshé.

"At length we reached Hami, which comprises a Chinese town inside a small but neatly-built mud fort. Adjoining it is a large suburb containing the bazaars and numerous serais and dwelling-houses of Chinese and Tunganis. We put up in a Tungani's house in this suburb. About a quarter-of-a-mile to the south-west is the old town, peopled exclusively by Turks under their own Wang or hereditary governor. The Wang left for Peking on the day of our arrival at Hami, as he is required to present himself there on New Year's Day every ninth year. With the exception of the Wang's house, the old town is miserably built. Several officers of the late Amir Yakub Beg are in exile here. They of course remembered Sir D. Forsyth's mission, and on hearing that we were English were very attentive. I abstained from visiting the principal man among them, Muhammad Khan, formerly Hakin Beg of Kashgar, only because I feared by so doing I might increase the suspicions of the Chinese, and perhaps hinder their liberation, for which petitions from the principal Mussulman inhabitants of Turkestan had been forwarded to the Governor-General at Urumtsi.

"On nearing Turfan we passed through the ruins of an ancient town, in which a large tomb with a minaret 200 feet high is conspicuous. The Mohammedan town is about 1½ miles to the west of the Chinese town, and the distance across it from the eastern to the western gate is about a mile. The Tungani and Chinese element predominates in the population. I was able to cash Government of India currency notes at Turfan. The discount charged was heavy, but that Indian paper money should be negotiable at all in so remote a place shows how widespread is the confidence of Asiatics in the good faith of the Government of India.

"Urumtsi, the headquarters of the Chinese Government of Turkestan, is situated in a broad valley within the Tian Shan range, watered by a large stream which flows from the southern side of the mountains. It consists of a cluster of nine or ten separate small walled towns. The population is mixed, comprising Manchus, Chinese, Tunganis, and Turks, and there is a large bazaar stocked with Chinese and Russian wares. From November to March the climate is very severe, but the city is well supplied with coal and charcoal of excellent quality. My visit took place in the middle of December.

"Liu Joshwé, the Governor-General of Turkestan, and the only man in the province permitted to use a palanquin, was very attentive to me during the seven days of my stay in Urumtsi. He made many inquiries about India, and seemed especially curious regarding the exact nature of the relations between the British Government and Afghanistan, and of the events at Panjdeh in 1885. He seems to be popular with all classes of the people throughout the province, and enjoys the prestige of having regained Turkestan for the Chinese in 1878, and governed it ever since.

"I had now completed the circuit of Chinese Turkestan, and, Kashgar excepted, had visited almost every important place in it. The chief characteristic of the country is its extreme poverty. It may indeed be described as a huge desert fringed by a few small patches of cultivation. The only really good strip of country of considerable size is the western portion, comprising Kargalik, Yarkand, and Kashgar.

"Any discussion of our political relations with Turkestan would be out of place here. I may, however, without impropriety say that so far as my personal experience goes, the most friendly feeling appears to exist towards England on the part both of the subject Mahommedan population and of the officials of the Chinese Government. At present the Chinese seem to be adopting a conciliatory policy towards the Mussulmans, due perhaps to a consciousness that their position in Turkestan is not altogether secure. Occasional instances of ill-treatment of individuals occur, but, on the whole, so far as my observation extended, their rule is not a harsh one. The tortures and detestable cruelties practised on criminals and accused persons, as described by travellers in China Proper, are almost unknown in Turkestan, except that the punishment of the cage is sometimes resorted to, and severe beatings are often inflicted. Complete religious toleration is maintained. Crime is repressed, and life and property are in ordinary times as safe in Turkestan as in British India. The prestige of the Chinese stands very high, and they are looked up to much as Englishmen used to be in India some years ago. Among the people generally more confidence seems to be felt in the Chinese than in the Mussulman officials.

"The most glaring evil in the administration is the prevalence of official corruption, which is intensified by the uncertain tenure of office and the frequent transfers of the superior functionaries, but as a whole, I do not think the Chinese régime in Turkestan compares unfavourably with other Asiatic governments, such, e.g., as those of many Native States in India. In spite of their absurd self-conceit and other peculiarities, the Chinese appeared to me to be by no means altogether wanting in the better characteristics of a ruling class, and to be quite the superiors of the Turks in decision, moderation, intelligence, and the other qualities which fit men for positions of authority.

"The Chinese have no military strength in Turkestan that could for a moment resist the advance of European troops. To an unprofessional eye there seemed to be good raw material among the soldiery, but the men are undisciplined and poorly armed, while the officers are utterly inefficient and often addicted to opium. China is an unaggressive and not unfriendly neighbour, and our good wishes may therefore go with her efforts to maintain and consolidate her authority."

A short discussion followed, and with a vote of thanks to the reader the proceedings terminated.

THE STRAITS SETTLEMENTS ASSOCIATION.

A meeting of the above named Association was held on the 28th ult. Before proceeding to the business of the meeting Mr. Gulland proposed that the Secretary should write a letter of condolence to the family of the late Mr. G. M. Sandilands, expressing the regrets of the association. Mr. Paul F. Tidman then read a letter from the Colonial Office on the subject of the new Municipal Ordinance in the Straits, and a discussion followed as to the course that the association should take. It was agreed that the Secretary should address the Secretary of State acknowledging the measure as a fait accompli, but pointing out that very few people in the Straits knew what the ordinance was or the effect it would produce, and that it was better its aims should be explained first to the natives, and that Jan. 1 next was therefore too soon to put it into operation. It was also suggested that the idea of the new Governor seemed feasible, viz.:—To bring the Act into force on Jan, 1, but to pass an amending Bill for the clauses which were found to cause friction. These are expected to be the Government nomination of the President, the assessment on the docks and wharves, and the absence of proper compensation for land required for public purposes.

The report of the P. and O. Company states:—

The net surplus for the year, including £9,101 brought forward amounts to £152,982, which, after deducting the interim dividend of 2½ per cent. paid in June last, admits of a further dividend at the same rate, which the directors now recommend to be paid, a balance of £7,982 being carried forward to next year. During the past twelve months, although the directors have had to deplore the occurrence of more than one accident among the ships of the fleet, there has been no hitch or delay of any kind in the working of the mail service, which, on the contrary, has been performed very considerably under contract time. The mileage for the year has been somewhat less than during the previous twelve months, owing to there being fewer extra voyages, but it has amounted to 2,317,637 miles. It is with deep regret that the directors have to announce the death of Mr. Henry Bayley, through the accident of being thrown from his carriage. Mr. Bayley's partial retirement from the duty of a managing director was announced only in the last annual report, and it was hoped that with comparative leisure and rest he would recover some share of that health and strength in which he had been deficient for some time previously. His loss is sincerely deplored by the board, and by every member of the company's service. The loss of the Tasmania, together with other claims of considerable amount, brings the charge against underwriting to the exceptionally heavy sum of £127,734 for the present year. Under ordinary circumstances a portion of this amount would have had to be provided for from the reserve or suspense fund. At the present moment, however, the position of the repair and renewal account is such that the directors feel justified in making a call upon it to aid in extinguishing the insurance losses of the year. Accordingly £44,894 has been withdrawn for this purpose. Under the circumstances above stated there can, of course, be no payment to proprietors on account of underwriting, but the directors feel justified in recommending a bonus of 1 per cent. to be paid from suspense account, in conformity with the intentions of the board when this fund was started. Freight business has in various directions recently shown signs of improvement, as surplus tonnage has been gradually worked off and lost, while shipbuilding has continued on a moderate scale. For the first time for three years the company's outward bound steamers have lately obtained full cargoes. But unfortunately this advantage is counterbalanced by the exceptionally low rates prevailing homewards, especially in the China trade, where tea freights have recently receded from sixty shillings a ton to thirty, and even twenty shillings, a result which it is needless to say involves a loss in that branch of business. In the opinion of the directors the general conclusion to be arrived at with regard to the freight market is, that although the tendency is more favourable, as far as the conveyance of rough cargo is concerned, the number of vessels known as liners, and which compete with each other for the carriage of fine goods, is still too great to allow of an encouraging view being taken of immediate prospects, as far as trade with the East is concerned.

Field-Marshal Lord Napier of Magdala, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., Constable of the Tower of London and Lord-Lieutenant of the Tower Hamlets, was born in Ceylon on Dec. 6, 1810, and accordingly completed his seventy-seventh year on the 6th inst. This distinguished officer's career has been an historic one, and his services at Mooltan, Goojerat, Lucknow, Gwalior, Peking, Bombay, Magdala, and Gibraltar embrace some of the most striking events in the military history of our Oriental Empire

COMPRISING PRACTICAL RULES FOR LEARNING THE LANGUAGE, VOCABULARY, DIALOGUE, LETTERS, AND IDIOMS, &c., IN ENGLISH AND ARABIC.

BY

Rev. ANTON TIEN, Ph.D., M.R.A.S.,

Hon. Curate of Holy Trinity, Milton-next-Gravesend; Medallist of the Roman University de Propaganda Fide; First Class Honour Man in Arabic, Syriac, and Hebrew; and Proxime Accessit in Classics. Formerly First Class Interpreter to the Allied Forces the Crimea; K.C. of the Order of the Medjidie, &c., &c.; Author of the "Levant Interpreter" and the "Egyptian Handbook"; and Reviser of the Arabic Prayer Book, &c., &c.

"Dr. Tien's little book will be found a valuable guide to the traveller who wishes not so much to talk as to understand what he hears spoken and sees written in common Arabic. In the course of a hundred pages clever summary is provided of Arabic grammar, which will be found sufficient for all ordinary purposes, and which may easily be made the subject of further instruction from the native teacher."—SATURDAY REVIEW.

"The most useful portion of the book consists of the dialogues, the idiomatic exercises, the vocabulary, and other additions of practical usefulness, such as lists of official titles, of tribal names, and information on the divisions of time, on weights and measures, currency and commercial, legal, and political terms."—ATHENÆUM

"The perusal of Dr. Tien's admirable work will be the greatest value to officers and others under orders the East."—MORNING POST.

"Will be found very useful by soldiers, officials, students, and merchants desirous of obtaining a certain degree of proficiency in the spoken language, which is becoming in these days of increasing importance."—DAILY NEWS.

"Dr. Tien's Manual can be confidently recommended as the most simple, practical, and trustworthy guide which has yet appeared."—OVERLAND MAIL.

"The rules and explanations are clear, terse, and the point, and we cordially recommend his book to all who wish to acquire a conversational knowledge of Arabic."—TRUBNER'S RECORD.

"The book is of a handy and convenient size, and both author and publishers have rendered important service in placing it within reach of students."—INDIAN DAILY NEWS.

"The author of the volume before us has done good service in compiling this Manual, in which the difficulties—and, it must be confessed, they are not a few—in mastering Arabic are reduced to a minimum."—BROAD ARROW.

THE

BROAD ARROW

AND

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGIATE SCHOOL.

THE course of instruction is designed to PREPARE BOYS (Sons of Gentlemen, from 7 years of age) to occupy the positions of Land Owners and Occupiers, Land Agents, Surveyors, intending Colonists, &c. The education secured at this institution is of a very superior character, the whole object of the School being to impart a thoroughly practical and scientific knowledge of all agricultural subjects; a thorough moral, intellectual, and physical training, it pledges itself to send forth its pupils practically religious and sound scholars. The school is most pleasantly situated in a healthy locality. The greatest possible care is bestowed upon the health and domestic comfort of the pupils. The diet is excellent and unlimited. The school is very strongly recommended. References throughout Great Britain.—Address for prospectus the PRINCIPAL, Maypole Road, East Grinstead, Sussex.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

HERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

SYSTEMS OF

TESTIMONIALS.

From R. NORMAN SHAW, Architect to the Royal Academy:—

29, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C.,
February 19 1884.

The "Æolus" Waterspray Company have fixed two Air Extractors and one Air Warmer in the Life School of the Royal Academy of Arts with, we all think, the happiest results. Our troubles with that school have always been very great, as owing to the amount of gas consumed, and the necessity of keeping the school well heated on account of the Nude Models, its tendency has been to get unbearably hot, and when windows were attempted to be opened the draughts were most dangerous. It is now kept at a pleasant even temperature, and there are no draughts. The reason for this is not difficult to find. The very hot air from the steam-pipes, and the fumes from the gas, are carried off as fast as they are generated, and a continual stream of warm fresh air being supplied, the school is kept comfortable.

(Signed) R. NORMAN SHAW, R.A., Architect.

38, Grainger Street, West, Newcastle on-Tyne
May 25, 1887.

Re St. Peter's Church, Jarrow-on-Tyne.

Dear Sir,—We have pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of your "Invisible Roof Ventilators," which we fixed in above church with admirable results.—We are, yours faithfully,

(Signed) LAMB AND ARMSTRONG, Architects.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 28, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 2nd December; from Allahabad and Madras to the 30th November; and from Calcutta to the 29th November.

THE Viceroy arrived at Peshawar on Thursday, November 24th, and, accompanied by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, visited the city in procession next morning. His Excellency subsequently held a most imposing Durbar. The leading representatives of all the frontier tribes were in attendance, and on many of them khillats were bestowed. The Viceroy read a speech in Persian, congratulating the Chiefs on the peace and contentment he had observed on his journey from Karachi to Peshawar. The Viceroy and Lady Dufferin visited the Kyber Pass, accompanied on the trip by Colonel Waterfield, the Commissioner, and Mr. Durand, and under the conduct of Major Warburton, Political Officer in the Khyber.

OWING to pressure of work the Viceroy's visit to Kohat had to be given up.

THE Commander-in-Chief in India was at Peshawar during the Viceroy's visit, and accompanied the party up the Khyber Pass.

MR. H. M. DURAND, Foreign Secretary, goes on two months' leave to England, on private affairs. Mr. Cunningham, the Under Secretary, acts in his place.

KABUL letters state that the news of Ayoub Khan's surrender was made widely known by the Amir on receipt of the intelligence from the Government of India. It was officially published in the usual balletin, which the Amir has taken to posting up in public places in Kabul, while the news spread widely among the people generally.

DR. THOMAS BLANEY has been appointed Sheriff of Bombay for the ensuing year. He was also Sheriff once before, in 1876.

SIR SALAR JUNG has left Hyderabad and returned to Bombay.

MR. ROSS, the defendant in the Ross-Morgan adultery case, has been acquitted.

THE Naval Commander-in-Chief is expected in the Hooghly about Christmas.

MERCURY, the Australian racehorse, belonging to Lord W. Beresford, which won the Viceroy's Cup last year, is dead.

THE death is announced of Babu Roop Narain Ghose, head of the Ghose family, He was seventy-seven years of age.

UPPER BURMA is generally reported quiet. An attack on the police post of Lebya near Popa mountain was made by the rebels last week. The enemy were driven off with a loss of 18 killed.

A FATAL accident is reported to have occurred on the Bellary-Kistna State Railway on the 21st instant, by which three men were killed.

THE Khan of Khelat, at present encamped at Mastang, proceeded by special train to Rindi, on the 25th to Dadar, prior to proceeding to Bagh.

COMPENSATION has been awarded to the Raja of Chamba and the Chamba villagers on account of the extension of the Pakloh Cantonment.

Two hundred and twenty Scotchmen dined together on St. Andrew's day in Calcutta. Sir Alexander Wilson presided, and Mr. Justice Macpherson acted as croupier.

A COMMITTEE has met at Arrah to inquire into the present system of Irrigation from the Soane Canal with a view of devising an improved system of irrigation assessment.

THE marriage of Lord Herbrand Russell with Miss Tribe will take place at Barrackpore in February, when his lordship will resign his appointment on the Viceregal staff, and proceed home.

WINTER is reported to have set in early in Northern Afghanistan.

MR. J. F. FINLAY, at present Accountant-General, Bengal, probably for a time succeeds Mr. A. Cotterell Tupp in the North-West, Mr. Jacob or Mr. Rawlins hereafter obtaining the post permanently.

THE cultivation of the Persian variety of the date-palm in Bengal is to be undertaken, in the first instance, at Shahabad, Hazaribagh, and Chota Nagpur. In the Punjab the experiments already commenced promise well.

THE Punjab Government has lately been considering means for the encouragement, by District Boards and Municipal Committees, of Native female education.

GENERAL LOW has gone up the Chindwin to arrange details for the routes of the columns which are to take the Yaw country, which has been much harassed by Dacoits since we were there last cold weather.

A SAD CASE of suicide by a European soldier belonging to one of the regiments stationed at Rawalpindi has just occurred. The unfortunate soldier shot himself with his revolver while in a state of drunkenness.

IT is announced that the Indian Midland Railway Company will take over and work the line to Itarsi, connecting Bhopal with the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, as soon as the line has been put in good order.

THE Government of India has sanctioned the reorganisation of the Madras Revenue Survey Department, by which a large number of hands will be thrown out or placed on the pension list. The entire establishment will be graded, as an incentive to work and as a means of securing thoroughly competent men.

MR. J. RIVETT-CARNAC, on return from furlough, has resumed charge of the Benares Opium Agency. Mr. Allen Cadell, who has been officiating, goes as Collector to Muttra.

AT Gowrihar quite recently a Kachi woman performed the rite of self-immolation on the funeral pyre of her husband, in the presence of a large gathering of Natives.

THE Political Department is likely to lose one of its pleasantest appointments in the course of the next few months, as after the King of Oudh's estate has been wound up sufficient work will not be found to justify the retention of a Political Agent of the first class as Superintendent of Pensions in Calcutta.

IT is not believed to be likely that any hasty measures will be taken in regard to the Tibetan intrigues in Sikkim. The Chinese Government are willing and anxious to give all assistance in bringing about a settlement, and will probably take such action in the course of the next few weeks as will lead to a satisfactory conclusion of the matter.

THE HON. JUSTICE NANABHAI HARIDAS will, in future, preside in the Parsee Chief Matrimonial Court at Bombay. This is the first instance of a Native Judge being appointed to the post.

Mr. TOWNSEND, the petroleum expert, has succeeded in obtaining a supply of 300 barrels of oil daily from each of the two wells at Khatun. This will effect a great saving in the cost of fuel for the Pishin Railway.

THE net Indian Sea and Land Customs Revenge, exclusive of the salt revenue, for the first seven months of the current financial year, has amounted to Rs. 62,31,000, as against Rs. 55,96,000 during the [corresponding period of last year.

NOTES.

FROM India the news received to-day by wire and Overland Mail is uneventful. The tours of the Viceroy and Commander-in-Chief have been attended with marked demonstrations of loyalty and good-will amongst all classes, and it is evident that throughout the length and breadth of India the feeling of security under British rule is being strengthened and consolidated. Even from turbulent Afghanistan the report is that "all is quiet."

ACCORDING to the latest accounts it is believed to be now settled that Ayoub Khan will be sent to India. So telegraphs the Times correspondent, and it is to be hoped that the news is true. It will be an additional guarantee for the tranquillity of Afghanistan. A contemporary raised a note of alarm a short time ago to the effect that the British authorities had no power to transfer their prisoner to British soil, and that such an act might be taken advantage of by Russia in a hostile spirit towards England. This is sheer nonsense. Russia has nothing to do with Ayoub Khan, and is too wise to trouble herself about him. And he, being wise too, naturally prefers being in British territory—even as a prisoner—than sojourning again in Persia with the chance of having his throat cut by some rival or hired assassin—a thing quite on the cards.

THE most serious news comes from Nepal, where a revolution has broken out—Runbir Jung, son of the late Jung Bahadoor, who was a refugee in India, having suddenly crossed the frontier with a band of followers and pushed on, meeting with little or no opposition, to within twelve miles from Katmandoo. Mr. Girdlestone, the British Minister, was absent at the time, but is said to be hurrying back to his post. Not that his presence matters much, for the British Resident at Katmandoo is almost a prisoner there, and is kept purposely in ignorance of all matters connected with the internal or external affairs of the Nepal Government. Runbir Jung was formerly very popular with the army, and it is possible that if he gains possession of Katmandoo he may make himself master of Nepal. The Times correspondent telegraphs that in such case he may murder his rivals or banish them. He certainly won't banish them if he follows the example of his father in dealing with his uncles, whom he shot down in open durbar. This is considered in the East a much simpler way of arranging successions than banishment.

IT is comic reading to learn by wire from Constantinople that "it is rumoured in high Turkish political circles that the Porte contemplates taking up the negotiations in regard to the Suez Canal Convention next week by proposing to England and France certain modifications of details," and then to read what "the general belief" is, viz.:—"that no attention will be paid by either of those Powers to any suggestions offered to them from his Sublime Majesty." Poor Turkey! The "sick man" will hardly be healed even with such attentive nurses as France and England at his bedside.

REFERRING to this matter a contemporary says:—

It is odd that the Euphrates Valley railway project comes to the fore with steady frequence, and goes in again immediately after. Another attempt is about to be made to make the railway a fact, and with the hope that it will be of military importance to England. So it would at that time when, from design or accident, the Suez Canal is blocked against the passage of our troops by half-a-dozen vessels, freighted with blocks of rock, being sunk in that canal.

THE latest Madras scandal—the Morgan-Ross case—has come to an end by the jury coming to the unanimous verdict that the defendant was "not guilty." The Chief Justice, in summing up, pointed out that the only evidence for the prosecution which could be taken into consideration was that given by Mrs. Morgan herself, but that this was uncorroborated—the Native servants' testimony going for little or nothing. As Mr. Ross had been indicted criminally he could not be examined on oath, but he was questioned by the Judge, and his denial of guilt, together with the circumstantial evidence which he brought forward, had no doubt great weight with the jury. Besides, the lady in cross-examination confused and mixed up dates, which were of great importance, in a very inexplicable manner.

IT can hardly be said that the result of the trial has been a whitewashing of all parties concerned, although, as the Pioneer remarks, the extraordinary situation which brought a High Court Registrar to the dock of his own Court has closed in the least discreditable way that was possible under the circumstances.

BUT we agree with our contemporary that it is singular, at any rate to those who have followed the case from a distance, to find the Chief Justice expressing his approval of the course followed by Mr. Morgan.

"AT the best," says the Allahabad journal, "Mr. Morgan was making a dreadful exposure of the conduct of a wife whom he did not intend to divorce, for the pleasure of prosecuting a man whom he had no chance of getting punished—for from the first appearance of the facts the idea of any penal sentence would have been absurd. But now, according to the verdict of the jury, he has also extorted a confession from his wife of acts which she did not commit, and has brought all this shame and scandal upon himself and other persons without a cause. Unless we take in its undisguised simplicity the lawyer's view of the excellence of any line of conduct that brings people to settle their differences in Court, it is difficult to find an adjective for the stupidity of Mr. Morgan's action. The only moral, in fact, to which a case like this would seem to point is the unpleasant one that a mistaken petitioner may do more harm to society generally than half-a-dozen co-respondents who are not found out."

DURING the trial the question was mooted as to the justice of the law in India which makes adultery a penal offence so far as the man is concerned, but allows the woman to go free. The presiding judge pointed out, of course, that all he had to do was to administer the law as it stood, and although Mr. Norton (the counsel for the prosecutor) approved of the law, the Madras Mail, which has a very patronising article on him as "a son of whom his father would have been proud," reminds him that his father, Mr. John Bruce Norton, held a different opinion, and considered it "very unfortunate" that the offence has obtained a position in the Penal Code of India, which it holds nowhere else. And the same journal appropriately reminds its readers of the remark of Mr. John Dawson Mayne in the first edition of his commentaries on that Code that it is startling to contemplate the effects of a law which would have consigned Warren Hastings, Charles Fox, and the Duke of Wellington to jail for five years!

THAT old Indian friend the P. and O. is determined to keep up the good name which its steamers have of late been winning for extraordinary speed. According to the latest advices received to-day the next Overland Mail from Bombay may be expected on Saturday—Christmas Eve—four days earlier than was anticipated.

The directors of the Eastern Telegraph Company (Limited), have declared an interim dividend for the quarter ended Sept. 30 of 2s. 6d. per share, tax free, payable on Jan. 14.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, Dec. 18.

The weeks immediately before Christmas, when the Viceroy is on tour and the Government has hardly settled down to the winter's work in Calcutta, are usually the most stagnant period of the year in India. This year is no exception, and for some time past there have been few domestic or foreign topics of interest. The principal event of the past week was the opening of the Dufferin railway bridge at Benares by the Viceroy. This great work, which completes the system of the Oude and Rohilkund Railway, and joins the southern end of that line with the East Indian Railway, has been under construction for over six years. The problem which confronted the engineers was one of great difficulty, as the Ganges at the spot selected is a stream 3,000 feet wide, with a depth varying from 37 feet in the dry to 92 feet in the rainy season. This difficulty was further increased by the decision that the bridge should be utilised for cart as well as rail traffic. Several engineers were consulted, among others Sir Bradford Leslie and Mr. Barlow, then President of the Institution of Civil Engineers, and it was some time before the plans were finally settled. The bridge crosses the river in sixteen spans, seven of 356 feet, and nine of 114 feet, making the total length 3,518 feet. The cost, not including the approaches, was Rs. 6,076,207, or Rs. 1,727 per lineal foot, which is considered a comparatively low rate for India, having regard to the extent and difficulty of the work.

The Viceroy arrived at Benares on Thursday evening, and the opening ceremony took place on Friday in the presence of a large gathering of visitors, including the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, the Duke and Duchess of Montrose, the Maharajah of Benares, and others. Colonel Jenkins, the agent of the railway company, having read the history of the construction of the bridge, the Viceroy spoke briefly. The reflection impressed on his mind was, he said, one of wonder that the bridge should ever have come into existence, but he believed that if only enough money were supplied to engineers there was nothing which their mechanical skill was unable to accomplish. He could not sufficiently express how deeply he felt tho compliment paid him in asking him to declare the bridge open and in naming it after him. The party then adjourned to luncheon. The Viceroy, in responding to the toast of his health, alluded to the pleasure he felt in knowing that Mr. Walton, the resident engineer in charge of the works, was the son of one of his earliest friends. He had seen during his tour many magnificent bridges like that now opened, and he thought the English race could point to no prouder monuments of their domination over this country. No greater monument of his own name could possibly exist. He concluded by expressing thanks to the various engineers connected wiih the designing and carrying out of the work. The Viceroy left Benares yesterday morning and arrived in Calcutta in the evening.

The so-called National Congress meets in Madras on the 27th, 28th, and 29th, and the Native papers are now giving lists of the delegates from the various districts, and discussing the prospects of the meeting. The Mahomedans appear to adhere to their determination to hold aloof, and the congress will consist chiefly of Hindoos. It is stated that Rajah Sir Madhava Rao will preside at the reception meeting, and the Hon. Budrudin Tyabjee of Bombay at the business meetings. Six hundred delegates are expected, of whom 100 are from Bombay, 100 from Bengal, 30 from the Punjab, 40 from the North-West Provinces, 40 from the Central Provinces, and the rest from Southern India. Some representatives from the Eurasian and the domiciled European community are also said to be likely to attend. Unlike the Calcutta congress of last year the meeting will be open to the Press, but reporters will be excluded from the committee meetings. The subjects of discussion are:—1. Reform of Legislative Councils. 2. Military expenditure. 3. The Arms Act. 4. The separation of Burma from India. 5. The question of sending a deputation to England to urge the resolutions of the congress on Parliament and the public. 6. The prosperity of the country. 7. The separation of judicial from executive functions. 8. The expected deficit in the Budget. 9. The constitution of the congress. It will be observed that the congress proposes to confine its attention to political topics, and not to take up any questions of social reform.

The Calcutta Trades Association has addressed an important letter to the Government on the subject of the reform of the Calcutta municipality. The chief point taken up is the existing system which practically debars Europeans from election to the corporation. It is urged that as the city owes everything to English capital and enterprise the European element in the municipality should be strengthened. The present body is declared to be too unwieldy, and it is suggested that its numbers should be reduced to 60, proper steps being taken to secure representation of the various public bodies as well as the different classes of the community.

The extension of the Scinde-Pishin Railway through the Khojak Pass has begun. Owing to the amount of tunnelling required the work will take about three years.

The Amanal Mulk, the ruler of Chitral, has sent two students to Peshawur for instruction in English and medical science. His second son is expected to visit Calcutta shortly. This is a gratifying proof of the influence which the Indian Government has held in Chitral since Colonel Lockhart's successful mission last year.

Lieutenant Younghusband, King's Dragoon Guards, has arrived in India, having travelled from China to Cashmere overland, a journey which no European has accomplished since Marco Polo.

BURMA.

RANGOON, DEC. 17.

Assistant Commissioner Martindale, with a body of Goorkhas and military police, has attacked Mawhun, a mountain village to the south of Bhamo. The village was held by forty Kachyens, who stoutly resisted. The Kachyens were driven out with a loss of two killed and several wounded. Our loss was one policeman killed and three wounded. The attacking party behaved well.

Notwithstanding the large force pursuing them, Ottama's gang shows considerable activity. Fifty dacoits, forming part of Ottama's gang, on the night of the 15th attacked and attempted to burn Salin, a populous village on the western bank of the Salin, held by a detachment of Madras Infantry. The assailants were repulsed. Their loss is unknown. On our side one Sepoy was severely wounded.

An unfortunate incident has occurred. The Kale Tsawbwa, a Kachyen chief who had given much trouble in the northern portion of the Chindwin Valley, was arrested, with two of his Ministers, some months ago by Captain Raikes, Deputy Commissioner of Chindwin, and deported to Mandalay. The Kale Tsawbwa and his Ministers recently succeeded in escaping from Mandalay, and are now crossing the country towards the Tsawbwa's former territory, accompanied by a band they have collected. Their object is to attack the Tsawbwa whom we have installed in Kale. The ex-Tsawbwa has great influence with the Chins, and some serious disturbances may result.

The force commanded by Brigadier Low will be accompanied by Captain Raikes as political officer. When the dacoits in the Yaw and Minbu districts have been dispersed, it is proposed to attempt the exploration of the large territory north of the Yaw country and lying between the Munipur River and Yoemadaung Mountains. It is inhabited by wild Chins, and is totally unexplored. The Burmese Kings possessed a purely nominal sovereignty over this wide tract. It is important to open friendly relations with the Chins, as the Upper Chindwin Valley has been greatly troubled by their raids. It is believed that Captain Raikes' personal influence will enable him to effect the desired object.

Captain Raikes has shown great judgment in dealing with these savages, and has already had an interview with some of the chiefs of the Tashon Chins, the most important tribe, who have promised to prevent raids into our territory. If the Chins consent, Captain Raikes will advance towards the lofty mountain named Sangal Chaung, which can be ascended from Chittagong. Captain Raikes is not likely to reach Singal Chaung, but he will endeavour to get within signalling distance of a party sent from Chittagong. Even if the Chins do not oppose there will be great natural obstacles to overcome, as the country is covered with very dense jungle.

The Government of India have informed applicants for mining licences in the Ruby Mines district that henceforward licences will only be granted to persons resident within the Ruby Mines tract. The mining licence to Streeter's syndicate will, however, continue for some months.

The action of the Government in refusing mining licences is generally regarded as a mistake, as it is desirable to encourage the introduction of capital in Upper Burma. Mr. Barrington Brown, an expert selected by the Government to report on the ruby mines and mineral resources of Burma, arrives in Rangoon by the next mail.

The prospects of the coming rice crop are attracting attention. The local Government estimate the crop of 1888 at 950,000 tons. In commercial circles it is believed that the Government estimate is not likely to be exceeded. The crop of 1887 amounted to 1,150,000 tons, and the crop of 1886 to 1,050,000 tons. From the next crop the rice required for Upper Burma must be deducted. The demand for Upper Burma has steadily increased. In 1886 84,700 tons and in 1887 137,900 tons were sent to the upper province. In 1888 it is anticipated that 150,000 tons will be required for Upper Burma. This will leave about 800,000 tons available for export, or nearly 200,000 tons less than last year. High prices are anticipated.

WITH a view to improve the tobacco of the Madras Presidency, so as to make it suitable for the European market, the Local Government has decided upon engaging, for two seasons, the services of a tobacco curer who has learnt his work at the Poosa Factory, in Tirhut. The curer is to instruct the growers both as to cultivation and curing.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE PRESENT CONDITION OF THE INDIAN TEA INDUSTRY.

[BY A TEA-PLANTER.]

With a probable outturn in the China crop of tea this season of about one hundred and seventy million pounds, it is more than satisfactory to note that the estimates for the current period of the output of Indian tea point to a crop of eighty-six million pounds. In this the teas of Madras are included. It is noticeable that prices have been and are ruling very much lower than was expected at the beginning of the season; and this may be accounted for in three ways:—(1) by coarsely plucked, under or over-fermented, and badly rolled leaf; in consequence, almost necessarily badly sorted after manufacture; (2) the unsettled state of Ireland, which is a great consumer of good tea; and (3) competition with the China article. It would seem that, with the advent of machinery, a falling-off in prices had steadily taken place, which other causes alone are not sufficient to account for. A manager knowing his machine power, plucks probably treble of what would go to make a good ordinary tea. A volume of leaf coming in every day floods the withering accommodation; and so coarse, medium, and fine leaf wither together, probably without an attempt at separating the various qualities, by means of bamboo drum sieves, or otherwise. Hence uneven withering and possibly a drying up and blackening of the succulent pekoe leaf and bud—the leaves par excellence which go to give colour, strength, flavour and aroma; uneven fermentation, owing to the mixed state of the leaf; a thin, mawkish, dull-flavoured liquor with little or no nose to it; and a tea in appearance coarse or broken, or mixed for its classification. Reference has been so far made to the impetus given to leaf-plucking by the presence of powerful rolling machinery; but sorting machinery exercises an adverse influence as well, as, inasmuch as hand-in-hand with the temptations of powerful rolling machinery, it causes manufactured leaf to be worked off through a mesh never intended for it, thereby raising the classification, but depreciating the value. Nor is firing machinery the summum bonum it is made out to be, as the roll is only too apt to get burnt by a trifling negligence, or to lose its perfect fermentation by a deficiency of a few degrees in the requisite heat. It cannot be denied that rolling, firing, and sorting machinery have been a boon to the industry, and that as pieces of ingenious mechanism they are all that can be desired; but it is the temptation to over-plucking and coarse plucking, and the danger of inattention by the Native attendants, which combine to make up one of the causes of poorer prices. The weather, no doubt, has not at all times been propitious; and blights occasionally have exercised their withering influences: but the three great causes of low prices are probably correctly indicated. Taking the trouble in Ireland as going to make the second cause of a falling-off in prices, it must be known that Ireland consumers about one-third of the quantity credited to the United Kingdom, and that that consumption of one-third has fallen off 50 per cent. It is lucky that the China exports up to date have been some 35 million pounds short of the quantity for the same period last season; otherwise Indian teas would have ruled still lower. It will be seen that the third cause assigned for the low prices of Indian teas was their competition with Chinas, inasmuch as Indians, though more sought after, were depressed by the relative cheapness of Chinas. The position at present is that, with an estimated outturn of 86 million pounds, the official reports bring up the exports of Indian teas at 31st ultimo to a trifle over 50 million pounds, so that for this season we shall quite if not more than halve the China exports.

The supply of coolie labour is causing some trepidation amongst planters, as it is feared the opening of work on the Bengal Nagpore Railway will be an inducement to many otherwise intending emigrants to stay in their own country, and those who can be induced to emigrate will demand increased rates of bonus. The best description of labourer, and one who can stand the vicissitudes of the tea districts climate, has been found by a long experience to be out and away that from Chota Nagpore, and especially the Khol; and now that he can get near home more congenial work, there is every reason to fear a great falling-off in the yearly exodus to the tea plantations. Nor will this be all. Time-expired labourers will be wanting to return to their country, and for those induced to stay on demands for higher rates of bonus and pay will have to be met. Plucking will always have to be done by hand; but there is no reason why greater recourse may not be had to ploughing with bullocks, instead of the hoeing that at present obtains universally in the gardens. Deep-hoeing may not be supplanted by the plough; but there is a plough and appliances by which ordinary hoeing may be almost entirely done away with, thereby reducing cultivation charges by about two-thirds. Cultivation, manufacturing, and sorting being done by mechanical contrivances, Indian teas should be capable of being placed on the home market at an average of 7d. per pound—a figure that, quality for quality, China could not touch; whereas the average cost of a pound of Indian tea placed on the home market has been about 10d. per pound for this season up to date, and the average price per pound fetched about 15d.

The rates of carriage of stores to, and teas from the gardens are excessive. Compare, for instance, the rates of freight charged on cargo to and from Assam and Cachar, with the rates of freight obtaining between Calcutta and any of the home ports. Compare also the greater freight charged by ocean vessels on tea as against other cargo. Taking the Assam gardens we have the two only steam companies plying on the Brahmapootra exercising a monopoly. They work jointly, and the agents of the one line are the agents of the other, and are called joint-agents. This joint working was established when the Inland Flotilla Company started its competition, before which there was some semblance of opposition between the two companies. The Inland Flotilla Company has ceased to exist, crushed by the two existing joint companies—and the joint working still continues! Each has a sort of mail service too; that belonging to the Rivers Steam Navigation Company is called the "Dhubri Debrooghur Mail Service," and that of the India General Steam Navigation Company the "Goalundo-Debrooghur Despatch Service." The former "mail service" commenced working in 1883; the latter "despatch service" in 1886. The distance between Goalundo and Dhubri is also plied by the former; indeed, the vessels of the River Steam Navigation Company's "mail service" commenced to ply between Goalundo and Dhubri before the India General Steam Navigation Company commenced the running of their "despatch service." But as far as the public is benefited by any opposition or competition, there is none. The rates and conditions are the same; each has placed restrictions on the other, and there is complete accord between the two companies as far as the public is concerned. When the now defunct Inland Flotilla Company was running, a great effort was made by the two joint companies to conciliate the shippers; the smaller rivers running into the main river Bramahpootra, had small "feeder" steamers put on to tap all Native boat traffic, garden or otherwise; rates were lowered to throttle all such traffic, with the object of getting all cargo from its source into their own working. When the combined competition of the two powerful joint companies was successful in killing out their small rival, working in the interests of the province, opened out, and, supported by its magnificent tea industry, rates sprang up, and in the matter of tea freight alone, whereas those who signed an agreement with the two joint companies (made so to do, in anticipation of the competition) had their tea carried for Rs. 1-8 or 2 per maund nett, those unfortunates who would not bind themselves to any agreed tariff for a period (probably the time calculated to smother the opposition) had to knuckle down, cry peccavi, and pay, and are paying now, Rs. 4 per maund nett. Attention has been drawn to the attempt to compete against the Native boat service, when it suited the scheme of the joint companies to oust a rival, with the object of showing that these smaller rivers can be navigated by small steamers having flats in tow, all the year round. Of course the class of "feeder" running haphazard, at the whim of the local agent—that is, where it could not be utilized by the companies more profitably to themselves elsewhere, before the competition of the Inland Flotilla Company as now—is not the class of vessel that will answer to run up the small rivers, for more than five months in the year. But when the Steam Companies come to honestly assimilate the interests of the shippers to and from the Assam ports with their own, or shippers are driven to form or support a company that will, then may be expected to be seen a fleet of smaller vessels, with a draught that will admit of their going anywhere where a country boat can, at all seasons of the year, and a great reduction in the freight on garden stores and tea carried on the small rivers. Each district, nay, each province, in which tea is grown has its local causes and influences antagonistic to a cheaper working, but the necessities of the trade will compel them in time to find a proper level. The high rates of river carriage have been touched on; but it behoves those gardens—and there are many—who have to cart long distances, to have their roads put into easy working order, and to have cheaper carting arrangements. In Chota Nagpore, for instance, the cost of carting a pound of tea is about one-fourth of its cost of outturn on the garden. A great deal has doubtless yet to be done in reducing expenditure judiciously all round. Wonders have been done in the last 20 years, and wonders will still be done, both in manufacture and in cost of producing and placing the article on the market. And in this latter connection of markets, we have to augment the trade with Australia and Afghanistan, and induce a better trade with Canada and the United States. Russia, too, presents a vast field for good cheap Indian teas, full of promise when the present insane political jealousies shall cease. Much more determined efforts have yet to be made, moreover, to promote the sale of Indian teas in the United Kingdom and in our Indian territories, and those influenced by our rule, before we can make the plantation records of this great industry what they might and ought to be.—Statesman.

THE GOLD MINING INDUSTRY OF MYSORE.

(Madras Mail.)

It is with considerable hesitation that we devote a large part of this issue to the reprint of a letter which the Editor of this journal ventured to inflict upon his contemporaries of the Mining

Digitized by Google

Journal, the Mining World, and the Financial News; but there is some probability that the communication, notwithstanding its prolixity, will be of interest to a good many of our own readers who take an interest in the progress of the gold-mining industry of India. The good people at home whose money has been expended in the development of that industry at Kolar, have, as a rule, an exceedingly vague idea of what has been, and should be done on their behalf. They cannot readily read between the lines, or apply the lessons of the figures of the weekly reports which are laid before them; but they are all agreed that it would be very nice to see their investments return cent. per cent. of profit for the rest of their lives. Madras is so close to the field of labour that the residents of this city need experience no great difficulty in obtaining a general idea, by personal inquiry and observation, of what has been accomplished so far; yet visitors to the field are few and far between. This seeming local indifference to the growth of a Ballarat at our doors must not be regarded as significant of indifference to the advantage to India that may be expected to arise from the creation of a new demand for labour, and the discovery of supplies of the only possible cure for the demoralised rupee. Kolar is making an entirely new departure in the commercial history of India, and if she should turn up trumps a great incentive will be given to the exploration of quartz reefs elsewhere. The Wynaad made great promise six or seven years ago; but its performance was too melancholy; yet if Kolar continues to do well the Wynaad will most probably look up again, and make a fresh start. The Nilgiris, too, are supposed to contain auriferous formations, which could be reached inexpensively; and the North Arcot District is said to abound in favourable indications. The industry is in its infancy in India, and it is one which grows slowly. But the progress which has been made so far at Kolar is exceedingly encouraging. The mine that attracts most attention is the Mysore, which is pioneering the way for all the field; and the fierce light of much irresponsible and captious British criticism is cast upon the Superintendent of that mine, little as he may court or relish notoriety. There are other promising mines, and other excellent men at Kolar; but from the London point of view the Mysore is the test mine, and its superintendent is the man to be lauded, girded at, or hung. This is in a sense unjust to other superintendents, whose strenuous labours are ignored, or are gauged by those of a neighbour with whom they are not officially associated. But all in good time will the superintendents who emulate, or improve upon the example of Mysore have their reward. The letter to which we have referred was written in view to tranquillising some very anxious minds at home, and should it aid in dispelling some of the ill-founded alarm which has of late found expression in London and Glasgow, it will not have been written in vain. It deals for the most part with the proceedings at only one of the thirteen Companies now on the field, but the more developed of the other companies will probably come in for notice in another letter at an early date.

There ought, one might think, to be no reasonable occasion for placing before the home public at this date such a glance at the features of the Kolar Goldfield as is embodied in the letter under notice, but, unfortunately, most of the shareholders are in the dark, and they do not possess the means of lightening their darkness. The companies are directed and managed from London. The Boards are small bodies of men of good repute in the commercial world, and no pains are spared to keep them in touch with the executives under their orders. But the 6,000 miles between London and Kolar place a very serious difficulty in the way of a prompt and exact ascertainment of what has been accomplished, and of the reasons for projects for the future. It may not be impossible, but it is very difficult, to compensate the companies for the want of Indian experience that is felt by the majority of the directors, managing directors, and secretaries. The Boards have to depend upon the reports of the superintendents on the field, and they rarely read those reports with the aid of personal knowledge of the circumstances or conditions which are described. The section of the home public that finds the great bulk of the capital would be deaf to any overtures that might be made by a Board domiciled in Madras. The Board that they insist upon having must have its permanent official habitat in London, and the shareholders must be free to hold the members of the Board personally answerable at meetings in London for their direction of affairs. This is the system, and there is no chance of home capitalists departing from it. But both Boards and shareholders should be glad to obviate, or at least to lessen the disadvantages connected with the inability of the members of the former to conduct personal investigations. "There is no manure like the farmer's foot." The Superintendents work with great zeal, and, in our judgment, with remarkable success, but they do so at the risk of being misunderstood or misrepresented. Let them be never so careful to stick closely to facts, let them be never so anxious to pursue the happy mean between optimism and pessimism, yet they may be caused the chagrin of finding that the readers of their reports run away with the idea that they have said a great deal more or less than they ever intended to say. The Boards of course refrain from "cooking" the periodical reports, and they try at the annual meetings to give, on the strength of those reports, a comprehensive account of the progress of works. For all this the average shareholder is habitually conscious of being in want of information that he can grasp. If a man of the high professional standing of Mr. John Taylor or Mr. Darlington were periodically to visit the mines, and to report impartially thereon in a popular kind of fashion, for the special benefit of shareholders unversed in mining details, and in a more technical manner for the benefit of experts, the lively game of "bears" and "bulls" in the Stock Exchange would not be played with so much success and impunity as is now the case. The Kolar Companies are in rivalry to a certain extent, and rivals in trade do not easily co-operate; but the Boards of Companies ought to be able to agree upon common action for the general good in regard to sending out a first-class expert once a year to dispassionately inspect all the mines. Such a man would have to be remunerated handsomely, but if his fee were divided among all the Companies the expense to each would not materially increase the year's outlay. Something ought to be done, and done soon, to modify that ignorance of things as they are at Kolar, which has of late not only been seriously detrimental to the interests of shareholders, and the peace of mind of the executives, but has tended to cast an unmerited blight on an industry which needs all reasonable encouragement.

INDIAN BANKING.

(Bombay Gazette.)

In the first six months of the present year the rate of interest or discount in England was a little under 2 per cent. In Calcutta, Bombay and Madras the Bank rate was 7½—7 and 6¾ respectively, or an average of little over 7 per cent. for India. With this rate of earning the Indian Presidency Banks realised on their capital of 3½ crores a surplus of 28 lakhs in round figures, whereas taking three of the largest English Metropolitan Banks, namely, the London and Westminster, the Union, and the London and County we find that these, with an aggregate capital of £6,505,000, or say six-and-a-half crores of Indian money, earned over £530,000, equal to fifty-three lakhs. Taking into consideration only the rates of discount in the two countries, the disparity may appear great; but, in order to have a right view of the subject, the resources of each group of banks require to be taken into consideration. Thus the Indian Banks had, besides their capital of 3½ crores, reserve funds deposits and other resources to the extent of Rs. 14,52,000, or say 18 crores in all, against which their English contemporaries had an amount of £76,120,000, or say over 76 crores. Of the 18 crores of the Indian Banks over 10½ crores were used in their operations, whereas the English banks utilised over £57,000,000, equal to 57 crores of their own and other people's money. Calculated on this basis, the twenty-eight lakhs of earnings of the Indian Banks show a percentage of 2·80 against ·70 per cent. of their English rivals, or exactly one-fourth of the former. The Indian Presidency Banks have this in common with the English Metropolitan Banks we have mentioned, that both sets of Banks are banks of loans and discounts, and do not transact exchange business properly so-called. The Indian Banks have the internal exchange business of the country in their hands. By means of their branches, they buy Native bills of exchange drawn against country produce sent to the Presidency towns for export to foreign countries. The English Banks may be said to have a counterpart of this sort of business in the discount of what are known as Trades Bills in England. These bills are drawn by manufacturers and other producers in England, and represent value of indents or orders which they execute for agency or commission houses having correspondence with foreign countries. Thus, a Native merchant in India sends an order for 100 packages of piece-goods or 100 tons of copper to his agents in England. These agents pass on the indent or order to the respective manufacturerers, and these latter when they complete the goods send them on to the parties concerned, drawing on them for the cost by means of their trade bills. These bills have generally a currency of three months to run, but being discounted with the banks, the drawers are put in funds for their further operations. The drawees of the agents take up these trade bills by means of funds created by their own bills drawn on their Indian correspondents against the shipment of goods received from the manufacturers. It is the business of the Exchange banks to negotiate these bills, and thus these banks take up the business where it is left by the metropolitan institutions. In the exports of produce from India the same process is gone through. The Presidency banks finance for the produce from the interior to the sea board, and from thence the running, so to speak, is taken up by the Exchange banks. It is strange, however, that the English Exchange banks which have their branches in India should make such a poor thing of the business. We say this from the small dividends which these banks pay their shareholders. Doubtless the general depression of business may have something to do with this result, but seeing that the entire foreign trade of India bulks to fully 150 crores, and that there are hardly half-a-dozen competitors in the field, one would naturally suppose that the banks in question would show a better result of their operations than what they actually do. The value of India's trade in imports and exports with foreign countries in merchandize alone exclusive of treasure amounts as we said to fully 150 crores of Indian money. The banks could secure and do actually secure the financing for almost the whole of this trade. Of course their combined capital will fall considerably short of this amount, but they have their credits with the London Joint-Stock Banks, and under these credits they can operate fully up to the requirements of the trade with an adequate cover. This cover consists of merchants' bills drawn against produce secured with shipping documents representing that produce. To pay for these bills the Exchange banks create funds by drawing their own bills on the London Joint-Stock Banks with which they may have opened credits. This simultaneous operation of buying and selling bills constitutes the main business of the Exchange banks, and no bank manager is worth his salt if he fails to clear at least one per cent. by the operation. These banks have most of them branches in China also, and taking advantage of the cross exchanges between India and China and China and England, bank exports sometimes clear more than that amount. Taking, however, the least that could be done on a turn-over of 150 crores the Indian Exchange banks ought to net 1½ crores between themselves, and this is not a small amount to divide amongst half-a-dozen competitors. We do not ignore the charges or outgoings of the banks, but these ought to be a small percentage, judging from the standards of our Presidency Banks. Thus the Bank of Bengal's working charges for the year come to 5 per cent., of the Bombay Bank 4¾ per cent., while that of Madras shows only 5¼ per cent., that is, on the paid-up capitals of the respective Banks. As the Exchange banks have branches in foreign countries we would be safe in taking their charges at half as much, or say 7½ per cent., on their respective capitals. It is singular under the circumstances these institutions do not make larger returns.

BENGAL.

IT has been arranged to hold a Volunteer Camp of Exercise on the Ballygunge Maidan from the 8th to the 21st of February.

JANUARY 9th is the date fixed for the Photographic Exhibition in the Calcutta Museum. Nine medals are to be given, including one by the Viceroy.

To suit the convenience of a majority of the railway authorities consulted, it has been decided that the Railway Conference which was to have been held in Calcutta in February next shall instead be held at Simla in August.

THE weather has been fine in Bengal. The late rich harvest has begun, and promises to yield a good outturn, except in Chota Nagpore and parts of the Burdwan and Orissa Divisions and the Gya District, where the crop had insufficient rain in September and October. Rain is wanted in Chota Nagpore for the rabi crops; elsewhere the sowing of these crops and of poppy is progressing favourably.

ONE Gobordhone Chondal, a common coolie, residing at Seebpore, has been nominated for a seat on the Howra Municipality. After this no one will doubt that Local Self-Government is making marvellous progress in Bengal.

THE Political Department is likely to lose one of its pleasantest appointments in the course of the next few months, as after the King of Oudh's estate has been wound up sufficient work will not be found to justify the retention of a Political Agent of the first class as Superintendent of Pensions in Calcutta.

IT is not, the Englishman believes, likely that any hasty measures will be taken in regard to the Tibetan intrigues in Sikkim. The Chinese Government are willing and anxious to give all assistance in bringing about a settlement, and will probably take such action in the course of the next few weeks as will lead to a satisfactory conclusion of the matter.

BUNDELKHAND stands in need of a deal of civilising. It is probably the most backward of all the States and provinces, and customs prevail in it of which we, happily, hear nothing in other parts of the country. At Gowribar quite recently a kachi woman performed the rite of self-immolation on the funeral pyre of her husband, in the presence of a large gathering of Natives. It is the first case of suttee which has come to notice for a long period, and it is to be hoped that our Political Agent in Bundelkhand will institute a searching inquiry into the facts, and that the Government will sanction the severe punishment of the principal actors in the tragedy.

IT will surprise people not acquainted with the salt trade to hear that Bengal manufactured only 66,000 maunds of salt last year, and imported 10,379,000 maunds more from the United Kingdom, Hamburg, the Arabian and Persian Gulfs, and Italy. Smaller quantities came from Bombay and Aden, and even from Cape Town. There was a falling-off in the manufacture to the extent of 380,000 maunds, or about 85 per cent., but the increase of importation far exceeded that amount. The cause of the decrease was the opposition to stricter regulations against smuggling, which in previous years, as is officially reported, used to be carried on in almost every warehouse and salt works. There has been a steady falling-off in manufacture at Balasore, which is attributed to the cheapness and superior quality of salt from Liverpool. The importation of Liverpool salt into Balasore has risen during the last five years from 24 maunds to 143,397 maunds.

THE following, regarding the mill industry of Bengal may be of interest:—In 1886-87 there were in the 24-Pergunnahs forty-five mills, giving employment to over 40,000 hands, at work during the year. The depression in the jute and cotton industries continued to be felt, though less severely than in the previous year. There was some improvement in the gunny market, and the number of working days in the jute mills was raised from four a week to nine a fortnight. About 76,800 tons of jute were worked up during the year, against 46,662 in the preceding year. In the cotton industry the main features of the year are stated to have been a steady fall in prices all round, a fair demand at the decline in prices for yarn, and an increased production, with a gradual transference of spindles to manufactures of lower counts of yarn on account of the competition of Bombay in production of the finer yarns; 8,330 tons of cotton were worked in the mills during the year, against 5,933 tons in the preceding year.

THE following is a fuller description of the terms of the order of the District Judge in the Simla Bank case. The Court declined to make a compulsory order, but granted a supervision order, the petitioners consenting. The appointment of liquidators, the remuneration to be given them, and the security to be taken from them, has been reserved until the meeting of creditors and others to be held in March next, when these questions will be discussed and decided. Messrs. Chisholm and Elston, the liquidators appointed at the voluntary winding-up meeting in May last, will continue to act as liquidators till the meeting in March, the Court finding no ground for their removal now, as it considered their management of the affairs of the estate up to the present satisfactory. The Court further came to the conclusion that the charges made against them in the petition were unfounded, and that the statements concerning the proceedings at the meeting and the action of the chairman were untrue.

AMONG the earliest of the cold weather visitors to India is a French officer, Captain Antoine de Gimel, who has been serving in Tonquin. He arrived at Calcutta from China some days ago, and with the courteous permission of the Government of India intends to make himself acquainted with the internal economy of the army in this country, and also the conditions under which service is performed. He has visited the army manufacturing in and about Calcutta, and is now bound for the Cavalry Camp at Lawrencepur, where he will see our troops working as on a campaign. The French have raised Native corps in Tonquin, and are naturally anxious to make them as efficient as possible, and with this object in view they seek to utilise the experience which we ourselves have gained in India in dealing with our Sepoys. Captain de Gimel will visit the North-West border in the course of his tour, and will doubtless be particularly interested in the organisation of the Frontier Force.

MADRAS.

A FATAL accident occurred on the Bellary Kistna State Railway on the 21st ultimo, by which three lives were lost.

A BRANCH of the Primrose League is to be shortly opened at Madras. A preliminary meeting was held on Friday at the Doveton College.

IT is reported at Bangalore that Mr. White King, Assistant Resident of Mysore, is going on furlough. Major Robertson from Hyderabad, who left Bangalore lately, succeeding him.

THERE is a vacancy at the College of Engineering, Madras, for an assistant master, to teach surveying in all its branches. The appointment will be a temporary one, lasting probably until November, 1888. The salary will be Rs. 50 a month for any man who holds no substantive appointment under Government. No notice will be taken of applications from men who do not hold first-class certificates as surveyors, and who have no practical experience.

AN important ruling has just been issued by Government, in which they have decided, in regard to a question raised by the Tanjore Municipality as to the amenability of the South India Railway Company to pay assessment under the Municipal Act for land held by them within municipal limits adjacent and contiguous to stations, that, as the land is waste and access or to a building for which tax is already paid, no tax can be admissible for such land.

BOMBAY.

THE balance of the Berar surplus for the last official year, amounting to some two and three-quarter lakhs of rupees, has been recently paid over to the Nizam's Government by the British authorities.

THE Secunderabad paper says that a few days ago, before he left Hyderabad, Sir Salar Jung received a long letter from Mr. Gladstone congratulating him very warmly on his articles in the Nineteenth Century.

ON Sunday, the 20th, it being the birthday of Queen Marguerite of Savoy, consort of King Umberto I, and the Italian man-o'-war Rapido happening to be in Bombay harbour, all the Government vessels there displayed Italian bunting in honour of the occasion. The two English turret-ships, the troopship Serapis, and the French war-vessel Brandon were all gaily decorated. So were also the Rubattino Company's vessels. The Amberwitch and other vessels hoisted the Italian flag.

THE Deccan Times announces that H.H. the Nizam has sanctioned a grant of four-and-a-half lakhs of rupees for education this year in his dominions, in addition to the funds to be raised by cess on the land revenue, of which two pies per rupee are to be devoted to primary education. This cess is estimated to yield a further sum of between seventy-five and eighty thousand rupees from those districts alone which had been surveyed and settled. This is an advance on the miserable and altogether unworthy expenditure which was formerly devoted to educational purposes in Hyderabad.

AT a meeting of the Pleaders' Association the letter from the High Court Judges and the proposal of the Bombay Bar to have the Legal Practitioner's Act in the Presidency were discussed, and it was resolved to ask the opinion of the Pleaders' Association at Calcutta and Madras.

IN connection with the retirement of the Hon. Mr. Justice West from the Bench of the Bombay High Court, to take his seat in his Excellency the Governor's Council, the Pleaders' Association have passed a highly appreciative resolution, expressing regret at their separation, and the sense they entertained of his lordship's judicial abilities and knowledge of law, and the valuable services he had rendered the State while presiding for about fourteen years on the Bench of the High Court.

THE Deccan Times understands that his Highness's Government has nominated a Committee to draw up a set of rules for the future regulation of printing presses and newspapers in Hyderabad. Attention to the want of any law on the subject in these dominions, our contemporary remarks, has been excited by the extraordinary growth of journalism here, Native and European, that has characterised the past few years, and upon which we had lately occasion to remark. The need of some precautionary measures in this direction has also probably been suggested by this fact, that a tendency has exhibited itself in some quarters to abuse the Liberty of the Press—a phrase which must be accepted, under the most favourable circumstances, with some reservation when spoken of in connection with an autocratic Government such as that of Hyderabad.

NATIVE PRESS.

DHULIP SINGH.—In fiery words Dhulip has given vent to his feelings. He has blamed the English, and afforded an opportunity to the Russian newspapers to proclaim their hostility to the English. But they ought to know that anything hostile to the English will not find place in India, whatever vanity the Russians may display, and whatever statement the Russian newspapers may make. We 250 millions of Indians are well-wishers of the English. On behalf of the whole population of India we trample upon those Russian newspapers. But we have some regret for Maharajah Dhulip.—The Praja Bandhu.

INDIAN ARTS AND MANUFACTURES.—The arts and manufactures in India are at the present moment in a very miserable condition. So long as the Western art and manufactures are not introduced in our country there can be no hope for our real happiness. It is true that the Government has established schools of art in Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, and Lahore, but those institutions do not teach the manufacturing of articles of daily use. We cannot believe that the Government will soon establish such institutions. Their establishment would make the English manufacturers losers. With regard to intelligence and aptitude for business the people of India are not inexpert. But under the influence of time and foreign subjection, they have become so inert and void of self-reliance that they cannot stand without the assistance of another. They are unable to understand their own welfare unless another person points it out to them.—The Suravi and Pataka.

THE NATIVE PRESS.—A clamour has again been raised for the revival of Act IX. Anti-Indians—Anglo-Indians are writing articles with a view to gag the Native Press. They are beseeching the Government to lend ear to their utterances. We believe that the Government will not listen to them. The Government ought to know that the Native papers are acting as its friend. They are pointing out every injustice that is committed. This is doing good in two ways. The English Government has been able to understand the merits and demerits of its rule, and remove shortcomings when it thinks it necessary. The people are also becoming hopeful as their grievances are made known. So the sensible English Government will not gag the Native Press, or listen to the evil-minded Anglo-Indian.—The Dainik and Chandrika.

THE STATUTORY CIVIL SERVICE.—The Rast Goftar is glad that the Government have resolved this time to introduce the competitive system, in the Native youths for the Statutory Civil Service. Certain conditions, physical and educational, have been prescribed as necessary qualifications for admission to the competitive examination, which is to be shortly held. But the paper is sorry that from the classes of students who have been held to be qualified for the purpose, those who have had the advantage of an English education at home have been excluded. One who has studied at an English University, although he may not have taken a degree, must be presumed to be better qualified than one who has graduated at an Indian University. It would be an injustice, therefore, to exclude from the examination those of the Natives who have studied in England.

THE MAGISTERIAL BENCH.—The Jame-Jamshed, commenting upon a report that Mr. Hamilton is going to be appointed a Presidency Magistrate on the retirement of Mr. Dosabhoy Framjee, says that a Native of India ought, in justice, to be selected by Government. There must be at least one Native on our Magisterial bench. Mr. Hamilton is a good man, and there is nothing to be said, individually, against his advancement. But the Native community would have just cause for disappointment if all the three Presidency magistrates were to be Europeans or Eurasians. The matter deserves to be taken up by the Native associations, whose representations to Government on the subject would no doubt receive proper attention from the Governor. The Kaiser-i-Hind is also sorry to hear that the claim of Natives to have a qualified man selected from their community should be set aside.

THE NIZAM'S OFFER.—The Bombay Samachar says:—For various reasons it is our opinion that it would have been better if the Government had declined with thanks the offer of sixty lakhs of rupees by the Nizam for frontier defences. It is said by those who have expressed themselves in favour of accepting the offer that it will be a standing token of the loyalty of one of the greatest of Indian Princes. This is a rather doubtful way of testing the loyalty of Native princes, which, in many cases, was shown unmistakably during the troublous times of the Mutiny, and during the Russian scare of three years ago. The enemies of England will put their own construction upon such gifts, and the Nizam's offer is all the more to be regretted, because other princes, as has already occurred in three instances, will think themselves bound in honour to follow his Highness's example. The burden will eventually fall upon their subjects, because the princes will know how to recoup themselves for the cost of giving a substantial proof of their loyalty.

MAJOR LORD BERESFORD is known, says the Pioneer, to be among those who have been recommended for a Brevet in connection with the Burma honours, the recommendation coming, as is understood, from the Viceroy himself, warmly supported by both the Commander-in-Chief and the Military Member. India once lost a good Viceroy, Burma way, from the slack arrangements made to ensure his safety, and on Lord Dufferin's late trip to the outlying provinces the Military Secretary had anxious work in making all the arrangements which secured his distinguished charge amid somewhat perilous surroundings.

THE Deputy Commissioners of the Central Provinces, who, in some cases, if report speaks true, have been feeling the yoke of the new Chief Commissioner rather heavy, are not to be allowed, says the Pioneer, to find rest by folding their tents like the Arabs, and silently disappearing into the recesses of their Districts. Even in the seclusion of a camp life a strict account of their movements is to be required of them. A series of excellent rules, it appears, has long been in existence, providing instructions for Deputy Commissioners as to what they shall observe and record on their tours, but unfortunately there was no condition that the results should be submitted to Government, which is thereby deprived, Mr. Mackenzie complains, of much that it would like to know. For the future, therefore, Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners must keep a record of their movements and observations when on tour. Mr. Mackenzie will not insist on a diary—that might hurt the feelings of some officers—nor does he wish to add much to the labour of writing, but he "supposes that every officer keeps a note-book, and it is not too much to expect that he should devote half-an-hour after the work of the day is over to recording briefly and simply the result of his day's doings." We are afraid this extra half hour will seem to some like that which was devoted at our earliest school to the concoction of a home letter, and which was always looked upon as the longest of the week; but we hope that the Government of the Central Provinces will gain more information than parents did under that uncongenial system. The general principles laid down about touring in the same paper are both sensible and liberal. The system, it is explained, was not invented to enable officers to dawdle round their districts with a gun; but at the same time "perpetual motion is not an essential or even a desirable feature in a cold weather tour." Halts must be made for the convenience of parties and witnesses to suits, and cases should be disposed of as notified to the parties. Yet must not the tour be confined to the beaten tracks and high roads; and, in spite of the caution about dawdling about with a gun, the Chief Commissioner believes that "on the whole a sporting Deputy Commissioner is likely to know more of his District than an officer whose only idea of tour work is to carry his cutcherry about with him by regular daily marches."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW.*

The burning Irish question assumes, in this, as in so many other periodicals, the prominence, of which much less than "twenty years of steady administration" will, we hope and believe, divest it. The place of honour is thus assigned to an article on "Mr. Chamberlain and Ulster," designed as a refutation of the remarks of the "Alderman of Birmingham," as he is somewhat sneeringly called by the writer. It is contended that the Alderman's ideas are wrong on almost every point. The "Saxon" or dominant" race has no existence except as an "Irish" race: "the Celt absorbed Norman and Saxon, and, to some extent, the Scotchman"; once again, then, Græcia capta ferum victorem cepit. This "race, in which the Celtic temperament generally, but not always, predominates, is the race of to-day, and the race of the future, in Ireland" (p. 1067). As for the supremacy of Ulster, the writer will have none of it. If not the last, Ulster is, he assures us, by no means the first, among the provinces of Ireland; and it is but right to say, that he produces many data in support of his somewhat startling conclusion. The writer states his case clearly and well, and marshals his facts with consummate ability.

The well-known work on "Capital," by Karl Marx, reputed on the Continent "the Bible of the working classes," is analysed with unsparing severity (and the fallacy on which Marx founds his arguments exposed) in the next article. The only really valuable portion of the Marx's bulky volumes is "the historic treatment of the growth of commerce and of the actual condition of the working class" (p. 1086). The paper, which well deserves perusal as a scathing denunciation of mischievous errors, closes with extracts showing that Hyndman and his fellow socialists have, in their pamphlets, given the British workman "nothing but coloured and doctored fragments of this somewhat insipid work."

From few things does the health of the said British workman suffer more than from the scandalous adulteration of food, and on this subject we have a very interesting paper, the third in the present issue. We shall never know what proportion of infant mortality is due to the adulteration of one article—milk; we look back with a feeling of regret, and almost of envy, to the Berlin system, under which a certain proportion of the "Schutzmänner," or policemen, armed with milk-testers, is invested with power to upset into the gutter the contents of any milk-can which fall below a certain standard of purity.

The first volume of M. Ernest Renan's "History of Israel," the importance of which can hardly be exceeded by those which are to follow it, is carefully examined in a subsequent paper. Renan's conclusion is the startling paradox, that the whole Israelitish history "is an effort extending over centuries, to renounce the false god, Yahweh (Jehovah), and to return to the primitive Elohim." The faith of patriarchal times was, M. Renan tells us, comparatively pure; it was "deism without metaphysics," and it was a distinctly retrograde step when the Hebrews abandoned Elohim for a deity personal to their nation (Yahweh), as did the Moabites, who called their deity Kemosh, the Canaanites, who styled theirs Moloch, &c. The reviewer states his objections in some detail, and with much force. "The whole distinction," he avers, "between Elohism and Yahwism, and the fancied primitive monotheism, rest upon the flimsiest possible foundation, and can only be maintained by defying the surest and most substantial results of modern researches." (p. 1132).

The great productiveness of Morocco, which is all but neglected, under its present Government, by the five or six millions of souls who form its population, will probably lead to energetic disputes between the various Mediterranean Powers, who have long coveted its natural riches—disputes which can hardly fail to come to a head on the death of the present Ruler. Full information as to its products, its antiquities, its seaports, and its incomparable climate, are given in a well-written article on the subject. The Reviews of Mr. Frith's Reminiscences, and of Dr. Darwin's attractive life of his father, the great Charles Darwin, will be read with pleasure.

A SWALLOW'S WING.†

Verily, we live in an age of sensationalism. Nothing, perhaps, is more conclusive evidence on this point than the tone of the literature of the period. Take "A Swallow's Wing" for an example. To say that it makes the flesh creep conveys but the feeblest impression of this most extraording effusion. It is a literary "chamber of horrors." The heart well-nigh stops beating, the blood curdles in the veins, as page after page of heart-rending—indeed, in cases sickening—spectacles rush along in maddening eagerness to amuse, to enliven, and attract. At one time the scene depicts drops of molten lead trickled upon the forehead of poor suffering humanity; at another the unhappy wretch has his hands firmly fixed in a vice while boiling oil is dropped upon each nail in succession. But the most diabolical, the most sickening, cruelty of the lot is when the same tormented son of Adam is tied to a stake, and with him a bird of the parrot tribe, whose only food is the flesh of the victim thus most foully tormented. Then follow tortures of the mind, such as when his food is flavoured to indicate the presence of poison—when all the preparatories to the molten lead inhumanity are gone through a second time, and matters stop just short of the cruelty itself.

The scene is laid in China, where, it is well known, want of feeling for the sufferings of life is a national vice, and barbaric systems of torture are a refined science. But why make fiction dwell upon such scenes? Is it merely to out-Haggard Haggard, hitherto the prince of sensational writers? Touches of nature, flashes of intellectual brilliancy, lashes of satire, dashes of gentleness—not one of these exists in the weird and heart-rending novel. This is condemnatory; but we gladly avow that if readers want their feelings harrowed; if they desire to feast their imaginations upon the diet of barbaric cruelty; if they wish to wake up in the night screaming at the tortures which a lively imagination is re-enacting in the land of Nod; if they seek to torture themselves by the tortures of another; if, in short, they wish to gloat, like Nero, upon the racked and quivering frame of a brother in the flesh, then they will not be disappointed in a "Swallow's Wing."

A LADY'S RANCHE LIFE IN MONTANA.*

Where is Montana. Not everyone, perhaps, could answer, "in the Rocky Mountains." So "I.R.'s" most enticing little brochure teaches this much, if nothing else. But there is, in truth, an immense deal of information in the compass of a comparatively few pages. On the whole, perhaps, the life is pleasant, and well-suited to those venturesome, hardy personages to whom the effeminate routine of the old country is wearisome and repulsive, and who pine for the excitement of the wilds of the hills and the freedom of the mountains. But oh, the cold! Fancy what 82 degrees of frost means? Picture water freezing in the basin as one washes one's hands, and the towels freezing stiff before they are returned to their places! How nice, too, when the bread is frozen solid, and has to be thawed for an hour before it is fit for use; when the handles of hay forks burn the hand unless there be gloves to protect the latter! Is it not charming, too, that a bit has to be thawed before it can be placed in a horse's mouth to prevent it sticking to the tongue!

But all of a sudden the warm wind from the ocean sweeps across the land, and ice and snow vanish as quickly as a London rough before the guardians of order. Then in due course the pendulum runs to the other extreme, and the thermometer—never lower than 90°—at times runs up to 109° in the shade. But as a set off the air is so dry that what would be quite unendurable in England passes without notice on the Rocky Mountains, and then the scenery is superb. One can well understand that it is delicious to jump up at daybreak, stride a horse, scour the prairies, drive herds of cattle, commune with nature, and be happy. But then this needs an iron constitution, especially if one chances to belong to the so-called weaker sex. And imagination shudders at the bare idea of serious illness with no medical man nearer than ten or twelve miles, and he, perhaps, none too skilled. Whatever may be the verdict as to the pleasures or pains, the charms or miseries of such harum-scarum doings as are depicted in a "Lady's Ranche Life in Montana," it is not open to question that to read about it just as one is about to sit down to a good dinner, with a glowing fire and a warm room, is very enjoyable, and "I. R." will doubtless find many companions de voyage so far as purchasers are concerned; and perchance not a few will visit her in the wild spots round which she has cast a halo of interest, and clad them with a robe of fascination.

PUFFS FROM THE ENGINE OF WAR.†

This little unpretentious volume is well calculated to while away an hour after dinner, if not with profit, at least with pleasure. The stories are as a rule amusing and replete with the genuine humour which, as a rule, is redolent of the sister isle. There is considerable brilliancy, for instance, in the conception that an officer who does not knew his drill gets through the difficulty by roaring out an obscure word of command, which, quite unintelligible in itself, serves to give the men the opportunity of displaying their knowledge, and go at least right till, unfortunately, one incomprehensible shout too many was given—the result, a fiasco.

"Only a little thing" is an amusing poem in the Ingoldsby Legend School of Art. But the gem of the book is "Sara Smith"—a novelette in three chapters—well written, cleverly conceived, HOME AGAIN.*

It is a sad and melancholy truth that as a rule authors are at the mercy of reviewers. A startling article in the Times, or a page of cutting irony in the Saturday Reviler, is literary ruin to any but the highest of the high. But in "Home Again" the tables are turned, and Mr. Macdonald holds up his persecutors to shame and execration; but is it quite fair to write down the Press as the embodiment of all that is mean and despicable in human nature? To portray reviewers dipping their pens in gall, scattering ruin broadcast, ignorant, conceited, overbearing in their views, self-opinionated, without a shadow of high or lofty feelings, condemning what is good, praising what is bad—is not this a libel on the fair name of a very serviceable body of men? Of course there are "paid hacks," who write to order as a means of subsistence, just as there are paid preachers who preach to live rather than live to preach; but is it commonly honest to condemn a whole class because of an occasional black sheep? And how, moreover, does Mr. Macdonald proceed to make good his case? He pictures the reviewer a youth barely out of his teens, deeply in love with a most fascinating and exquisite beauty. Unaware of her soulless character and her cold and unimpassioned spirit, he worships her with all the enthusiasm of early years; and when he finds she has written a book of poems he indites a high-couched and well-nigh fulsome panegyric of the work. Viewed from the standpoint of strict rectitude it is not open to question that such a proceeding was in itself scarcely justifiable. It was a falsehood in effect, if not in deed, but equally undeniably it was a fault which not one person in a thousand would have avoided; and it might, perhaps, be argued that a stripling who would have acted otherwise could be but a sorry specimen of human nature. Surely, Mr. Macdonald, you would not wish your son to be such a cold, callous mass of animated clay, with no sympathies, with no yearnings, with no high ideals of chivalry and romantic affection? To paint characters thus unimpassioned may be very well from a moral standpoint, but as long as the world is what it is some of us will prefer our children to be a little more human even at the expense of being a little less perfect.

Apart from the criticism just penned we have nothing but praise for Mr. Macdonald's volume. Its moral is good, its arguments sound; the principles it inculcates are worthy of acceptance, and there is an interest in the tale which should ensure general readers who, not being reviewers, may be supposed to be indifferent to the castigation received by their less fortunate brethren of the quill.

"Tobacco Leaves." By Bewlay, Strand. London: 1887. One of the partners in this well-known firm of tobacconists has written a very pleasant book about tobacco and smoking generally. In the several chapters will be found many anecdotes and interesting details we do not remember to have met with elsewhere. The views of the medical profession both for and against smoking are fairly set forth, and clearly show that little if any harm accrues from moderate smoking. The dose of tobacco, according to a French author, should never be in excess. He thus expresses himself:—

Beaucoup en fait du mal, un peu ne gâte rien."

The chapter on "Cigarettes" is quite new, and sets forth the claims for "the apology of a smoke" in an amusing light. This little work will no doubt find its way into the smoking-rooms of clubs, and will be provocative of many pleasant discussions on matters appertaining to the Weed, the Pipe, and the Cigarette.

LIEUT.-COLONEL L. CONWAY-GORDON, Director-General of Railways, is still at Simla, and it is now believed probable that the state of his health, which has been bad for some time, may necessitate his going on furlough. In that case Lahor will no doubt again supply a successor to the appointment in the person of Lieut.-Colonel A. J. Wallace, R.E.

THE question of privilege leave and full pay being granted to Mr. Ross, the defendant in the Ross-Morgan case, was referred by the Accountant-General of Madras to the Government of India, which is said to have decided that neither can be allowed under the Civil Leave Code.

THE Public Service Commission is now meeting every day in Calcutta. The principal issues still under consideration are the questions of an imperial and local service, the proportionate number of posts to be given in each, the liability of Civilians to transfer from province to province, and the raising of the limit of age in the Civil Service competition.

DURING the past year 42 374 pilgrims are stated in a consular report to have arrived at Jeddah, and of this number 9,479 went from India. Two-thirds of the entire import trade of Jeddah is supplied by England and India, including cereals and breadstuffs. Bombay flour has lately become an important article of importation, and has seriously interfered with the operations of a large steam flour mill recently erected by a Stamboul official.

THE number of Indian coolies in Fiji is about 4,700, and it will scarcely be credited that in the year 1885 they deposited in the Bank £3,469, besides lending a large amount at higher interest to traders, and remitting £84 to their friends in India. The deposits were made by only 106 persons, who must therefore be believed to possess the saving instinct very strong. The commonest fault of the coolies is staying away from their work, more than one-fifth of all their working time, on the average, being thus lost to their employers.

THE Benares Tramway Scheme may be now pronounced extinct. The projectors have moved on to pastures new, and the few yards of rails actually laid down are now being rooted up by the Municipality. A plan for supplying Allahabad with the same superfluity, mooted about three or four years ago, was more fortunate in that it never reached the point of appealing to the pockets of the public. A minor scheme for an omnibus service between the city and station during working hours met the same fate; and for the present it would seem that for passenger traffic in Upper India nothing is likely to compete with the immemorial ekka.

THE MYSTERIES OF CORRESPONDENCE.—A story is told of a young officer who, having been some six months only in India, was ordered almost from one end of the country to the other to join a battery to which he had been transferred. This was bad enough, but worse was still to follow. Soon after he was settled in his new station, he received a letter from the pay examiner cutting him the whole of his travelling expenses, which were considerable. As he was travelling on the public service, and by order of the Commander-in-Chief, he knew he was entiled to a free passage, but he also knew that to be entitled to a thing is one matter, to get it another. He read over the letter of retrenchment again and noticed that it was "No. 2,876 of 187—" The happy idea then occurred to him that if he also headed his reply with an imposing number, it would very likely strike awe into the mind of the Baboo who had made the retrenchment, and let him see that he was not to be trifled with. So, albeit it was his maiden attempt at an official letter, he boldly headed it "No. 3,001 of 187—" so as to give himself a good start over his enemy, and dashed off a strong protest against the proposed cutting. He gained his point, which he attributes to this day, not to the justice of his cause, but to the disinclination of the Baboos of the Pay Department to tackle a subaltern who had such an amazing official correspondence, and who was evidently a person not to be assailed with impunity.—Times of India.

A NEW STORY OF EYES AND EARS.—The Mayo Hospital at Lahore is largely attended by Natives. If we may believe a Sikh's representation, published in the local paper, they have not, however, that implicit faith in the Native staff which does so much to help a patient to recovery. It is obviously impossible that each one of the ailing can be overhauled by the English doctor, though this, judging from the venerable Sikh's complaint, is what they would like. The Sikh prologises:—By your Honour's favour I am a poor man and suffering from a bad pain in my ear. I went for relief to the hospital where a Native doctor told another, but younger Native doctor, to look at my ear. "Sit down," said the Native doctor. So I sat and that foolish one seized my right eye, and opening it roughly with his fingers, said: "The eye is very bad." "Herein is some mistake," I said, "for it is my ear that is bad." "Nay, it is the eye," said the young man void of understanding. But another having looked said it was the ear. And the young man put some medicine in my ear from the effects of which I did not sleep all night. I would gladly take any medicine or treatment that an English doctor, skilful in his profession, will bestow upon me, but I am not benefited by what that young man who knows not eyes from ears did. Therefore I did not go again to the hospital, and by Godis favour my ear will get well of itself.

THE ENGLISH IN INDIA.

IT will possibly be considered by many Anglo-Indians a marked change of front to find that the Pioneer has taken the part of the Natives of India in their complaints against English discourtesy and overbearing manners. Time was, and that not so long ago, that the Allahabad journal was looked upon as the chief exponent of the official Philistine dictum, "India for the English," and it was held, especially in Native circles, to be decidedly antagonistic to all views or opinions which did not come direct from the ruling race or met with the approval thereof. The Natives of India did not then look upon the Pioneer as their guide, philosopher, or friend. We do not say that the opinion thus formed of that paper was a correct or just one. It was always ably conducted, and frequently brilliantly written, for having from its commencement ranged itself upon the side of the Government the best pens in both Services were attracted to its columns. There they could write freely without the fear of "superior authority" becoming irritated or displeased ; nay, with almost the certainty that "superior authority" rather approved of communications to the Press which went to prove that government by the Covenanted Civil Service was the best of all possible governments for India. Indeed, it is no straining of truth to say that more than one writer owes his advancement in the Service to the fact that it was known at headquarters that he contributed to the Pioneer. And the proprietor of that journal reaped his reward too, that is to say, if permission to place the letters C.I.E. after one's name can be considered as a reward for the expenditure of much capital, time, and energy in struggling to climb the adverse heights of Indian "society" and "officialism." It is true that Ali Baba found a want of humour in the Bengali character, because he had never known a Babu to laugh at a C.I.E., and he declared that if one could not laugh at a C.I.E. he could laugh at nothing; but, nevertheless, the distinction was prized in certain quarters when it was first issued, and it may be that it is still coveted, although it is now as common as Horace tells us pears used to be in Calabria. But, without further digressing, we think that we may say, without fear of contradiction, that a few years ago it would have surprised not only the North-West Provinces, but the whole of India, to find in the columns of the Pioneer a lecture to Englishmen on their bad manners towards the Natives. We do not object to this change of front; on the contrary, we are glad to see it, but we may be allowed to express our astonishment at seeing it in the Pioneer. To slightly alter Pope's lines,

> "Th' advice we know is neither wrong nor rare,
> But wonder how the devil it got there."

However, there it is, and very excellent advice it is, as all who have had any Indian experience will admit, e.g. :—

Government, owing to a variety of causes, has been obliged to increase the strength of the army in this country, but this increase of strength is insignificant compared to what would be developed if all young Englishmen would be careful in their behaviour towards Natives. Every thoughtless action, every disparaging remark is repeated outside, and the ripple widens and widens.

It is no exaggeration to say that if the English were individually popular in the country we might with perfect equanimity await the arrival of Russia at Jamrud itself for all we need care. There would be no necessity of support from England; with the population heart and soul on our side no harm could befall our rule. The Government is undoubtedly popular with the mass ; the Native Princes are undoubtedly loyal to the Government ; and it remains for Englishmen to make themselves popular with the Natives.

We should bear in mind that if some Native habits appear disgusting to us so are many English customs filthy in the eyes of the Natives. The Frenchman has his frog stew and snail soup ; to the Chinaman puppy-dogs and earth-worms are appetising articles of food ; and if these are disgusting to us our fondness for pig and beer and beef is at least degrading in the eyes of the Natives. To walk over carpets and lie on sofas, and even beds, wearing road-soiled boots, is to them piggish ; to use utensils in common for eating and drinking is according to their notion of cleanliness, repulsive ; for women to dance with strange men unnatural and improper. If Natives, smell occasionally of bazaar tobacco it is at least a pure article, and we use and smell tobacco of a much more powerful kind. We laugh at our Aryan brother's notions of speaking and writing English, but what about our own attempts at Hindoostani?

There is much that will please our Aryan brothers in the above, but the writer can hardly intend it to be understood that he would have Englishmen in India eschew beef and beer (pork, considering how pigs are fed there, might be given up without a sigh even by Elia himself), abandon cheeroots and pipes, and refrain from encircling the waist of beauty in the mazy waltz. To sacrifice every taste or appetite in order not to offend one's neighbour was an advice given by St. Paul, and he no doubt acted himself upon it; but the young civilian and the British subaltern in India are not likely, without much difficulty, to follow the Pauline example. To go to bed in one's boots is considered "piggish" even in England, but surely this is not now a habit common to English gentlemen in India? The Allahabad censor protests, perhaps a little too much, when he goes on to hint that the behaviour of Englishmen towards Natives is one source of danger to our rule in India. We are not particularly liked abroad by any nation amongst whom we sojourn or travel, but we had hoped that the days of "bullying" Englishmen had long ceased in India. And we think that they have. There may be instances which can be quoted to the contrary but we are certain that they are few and far between. We believe that a better understanding is growing between Natives and Englishmen there. It must perhaps be for some time to come—a compromise, a sort of give and take regarding prejudices and feelings on both sides—but the result will be an increase of mutual confidence and good-will. And in that confidence and good-will there will be found a barrier against outward foes which will not be the least formidable of the defences with which we are strengthening our Indian Empire.

THE BRITISH NORTH BORNEO COMPANY.

The tenth half-yearly general meeting of the British North Borneo Company was held on the 7th inst., at the Cannon-street Hotel, Sir Rutherford Alcock presiding.

At the commencement of the proceedings the Chairman stated that the prospects which he held out at their meeting in June last as to the progress of the company had been entirely realised in the short interval which had since elapsed; the growth in their revenue and trade, and in the development generally of the colony, had been going on at an increased rate. The new companies to which he alluded at the meeting in June had had time to develop to a certain extent, and in reference to the tobacco company, some of the tobacco was reported to have been sold in Amsterdam at the price of one gulden 80 cents. per pound, a price considered so favourable that the directors had not been surprised to find an immediate demand for more land, chiefly on the part of the Dutch tobacco planters in Sumatra. Since the beginning of the year 130,000 acres had been taken by different companies, some for the cultivation of tobacco and some for other purposes; and the directors had now under consideration applications for 70,000 acres more. That made 200,000 acres applied for in one year, so it would be seen that the time was approaching when they would feel it necessary, in the permanent interests of the company, to refuse to dispose of large grants of land to individuals. They would have to limit the amount of land that any one person could take. No land had lately been disposed of under $1 per acre, whereas some of the earlier grants were sold at a merely nominal premium and a very small rent. Another great source of industry among them was the timber trade, which under the local company had been largely increasing. The British Borneo Trading and Planting Company, another of the new undertakings, had shown very great activity. Among the most important of the new companies he ought not to omit to mention the banking company proposed to be formed by Mr. Alfred Dent; but that matter would come before them at the special meeting to be held afterwards. These were the best prospects they had of an immediate large and rapid development of the resources of the colony, which, without capital and energy, might have remained dormant for another century, but which, with capital and energy, he thought would be developed in a way which would be satisfactory to the shareholders. There was only one point as to which there was no promise of immediate result, such as some of them might have anticipated—he referred to gold discoveries. Gold had been found in considerable quantities certainiy, but whether in paying quantities was a question. To make the gold a revenue producing source to the company it was necessary to find the quartz strata or the alluvial deposits from which the gold which had been discovered had come; and that point had not yet been reached, though efforts to accomplish the object were still being continued. For his own part, however, he believed that the chief sources of their revenue would be in the cultivation of the soil. Perhaps the most gratifying piece of information he had to give them was that their estimates for the present year, which had been carefully prepared by Mr. Crocker, in whom they had great confidence, showed a surplus. The surplus, it was true, was only $10,000, but that was infinitely better than a deficit of $30,000 as they had last year; and they had had still larger deficits in previous years. They had had a "long pull," and all sorts of obstacles, but he thought the tide had now turned. There had been the same steady increase in their trade; and the returns for the first nine months of the year, which were not the best months, showed a considerable increase, chiefly in imports, the net increase on the whole being $50,000. A new governor of the colony was to be appointed in succession to Mr. Treacher, who had rendered the company good and valuable services for six years, but who now desired to return to the colonial service. He believed he might say that they had secured the services of a gentleman who had been employed many years in the East, under the Straits Settlements Government, who had had considerable administrative experience, and who had been very highly recommended to them by Sir Cecil Smith, the present Governor of the Straits Settlements, and Sir Frederick Weld, the late Governor. The Home Government had assured them that they would be ready to sanction such an appointment. He thought that everything in connection with their affairs looked as favourable as could possibly be expected; and the fact that they now seemed to have got over their chronic deficits and had turned the corner with a surplus was the best possible promise he could give them for the future.

On the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Admiral Mayne (who said he fully endorsed Sir R. Alcock's remarks), a vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Treacher, in recognition of his services on behalf of the company. In reply to a question, the Chairman stated that they were on very good terms with their neighbours. There had been some trouble in Brunei, but the difficulties had not arisen through the company. The British Government had thought it desirable to send a commission to Brunei, to ascertain if any steps could be taken to obtain permanent security both in regard to the company's territory, Brunei, and Sarawak. The result was not yet known, but he had no doubt that a state of greater security would result from the commission. When the company came into possession of their territory about six years ago the population consisted of head-hunters and pirates. It was a source of great satisfaction to them that they now had neither head-hunters nor pirates within reach of their settlement or of any influence which they could exercise; and they had never found much difficulty in securing that result.

This concluded the business of the ordinary meeting and it was then made special, for the purpose of "considering, and, if thought fit, passing a resolution authorising, ratifying or confirming a contract dated Nov. 18, 1887, or any modification thereof, entered into between the British North Borneo Company of the one part and Alfred Dent of the other part, under the provisions of which contract Mr. Alfred Dent agrees to procure the incorporation under the English Companies' Acts, 1862 to 1883, of a Banking Company, for carrying on the business of bankers, &c., in British North Borneo and elsewhere. Mr. A. Dent being a director of the British North Borneo Company, Article 99 of the company's deed of settlement requires every such contract to be authorised or ratified generally or specially by a resolution of the company in meeting."

The Chairman stated, for the information of those shareholders who had not been to the solicitor's office and read the contract, that the twenty-five articles of which it consisted had for their object to secure certain facilities and concessions to Mr. Dent for the formation of a bank. They had also agreed to grant new titles for certain properties and land under lien to the company for advances. The general effect of the contract, together with other arrangements in contemplation, was that the company would receive about £11,000 in cash, retain two-thirds of the profit on the copper coinage, and get one per cent. commission on the note issue of the proposed bank, while they would also avoid the responsibility and liability of banking and trading operations, which, to meet the requirements of the country, they had been obliged hitherto to conduct through their treasury department. It had been urged at more than one of their meetings that it was desirable in the interests of the company that a bank should be established to facilitate trading transactions, and the directors had felt equally with the shareholders that such an institution would be advantageous to them. He concluded by moving a resolution to the effect above stated. Admiral Mayne seconded the resolution.

A brief discussion followed, in the course of which the opinion was expressed that it would have been better for one of the Eastern banks to have opened a branch in the colony rather than that a member of the board should be identified with such an undertaking as that proposed; it being thought by one speaker that if (as stated by the chairman) the company had no legal responsibility in connection with the bank contemplated, they might have moral responsibility if the proposed institution should fail. The Chairman, in reply, said that the contract would have to be completed by June 30. The proposed company would have no monopoly, and any other bank could compete with it. The directors would have been glad had they been approached by one of the great Eastern banks, but he felt that it was for those banks to decide whether they thought there was sufficient opening for them, and not for the directors to go and tout among them. He thought that the shareholders should feel greatly indebted to Mr. Dent, in the circumstances, for stepping into the breach, as it were, and giving them that which was very much wanted. They had no responsibility whatever in connection with the private company proposed to be formed. He then put the motion, which was agreed to with two dissentients.

A vote of thanks to the chairman and the directors having been carried, the proceedings terminated.

THE P. AND O. COMPANY.—ANNUAL MEETING.

The forty-seventh annual general meeting of the proprietors in this company was held on the 6th inst., at the offices, Leadenhall-street, Mr. Thomas Sutherland, M.P., presiding.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, referred to the loss which the company had sustained by the unfortunate wreck of the Tasmania. He did not wish to dwell upon the episode except for the purpose of calling attention to the financial bearing which the loss of that steamer had upon the accounts of the company. The directors had written off the whole of the loss in the accounts of the year. The total was the large sum of £103,369, so that the wreck of the Tasmania affected the working of the accounts to the extent of very nearly 4 per cent. In addition to this they had some very heavy charges against the underwriting account, which brought up the total charge for the year in that respect to £127,734, very nearly 4½ per cent. This charge was £96,000 in excess of the average charge against the accounts during the past ten years. He thought, therefore, that paying practically the same dividend as they did last year, and setting aside £223,160 for the purposes of depreciation, the net result of the year's operations would be regarded as extremely satisfactory. In order to pay the dividend in question they had had to withdraw from their suspense account 1 per cent., or £29,000; but against that they had accumulated to the credit of repairs and renewals account a balance larger than the balance last year by some £18,000, so that, in reality, their reserves were not affected. It was for just such circumstances as had arisen that that suspense account was instituted, and he trusted that the proprietors would acknowledge the judgment of the directors in establishing this fund, and that when times were favourable they would agree to the replacing the sum to that fund that they took away that day and to the adding a still further amount to it. The value of the company's fleet (after deducting the amount of depreciation he had mentioned, £232,160) was on Sept. 30 last £12 10s. 11d. per ton, and if they deducted from that value the amount of the cash reserves, the value of the fleet would then stand at the low rate of £8 3s. per ton. When he first began to make these calculations the book value of their fleet, after deducting their reserves, which at that time were nominal, not existing in reality, was £31 per ton. He therefore thought they had reason for satisfaction that the position was now so very different, and there could be no doubt that the fact he had mentioned was an excellent proof of the sound financial position of the company. It was a source of great satisfaction to him to be able to state that during a period of great depression their passenger receipts had been fully maintained, and had even somewhat slightly exceeded those of the previous year. It was still more satisfactory to him to state that that branch of their revenue was £200,000 in excess of what it was in the year 1880, at the date when their present and expiring mail contract actually commenced. During the last four years, which had unquestionably been four years of general bad trade, the high level of the passenger receipts had been adequately and fairly maintained. He regretted that he could not give so satisfactory an account of their freight traffic, as the receipts therefrom this year had been no less than £00,000 less than in the previous year. There had been special disadvantages in connection with the trade between London and Calcutta. Owing to some quarrels amongst the shippers there had been low rates for tea. In the Bombay trade there had been abnormally low rates, they getting as little as 8s. per ton for freight conveyed from Bombay to London. The Australian trade, too, had been very disappointing, and the inter-colonial trade between Bombay and China had been most disadvantageous. There was now some signs of improvement. During the last three months they had been able to send their vessels outwards with full cargoes, a course which it was impossible to effect during the three years before. Compared with the previous year, the expenditure showed a diminution of £75,000, which was partly due to their having somewhat curtailed their extra voyages, and partly to the fact that their coal bill had been considerably reduced. There had also been a great reduction during the past year in port dues, wages, and victualling expenses. Times had, however, changed very much, and instead of business being brought to them they had to seek business. In advertising, for instance, which ten years ago cost them £4,000 a year, they now expended nearly £12,000. Telephones, stamps, and such like expenses, which ten years ago were £5,000 a year, were now about double that sum. Notwithstanding, however, this augmentation in certain items, there had been during the last ten years a steady reduction in the expenditure of the company in proportion to the amount of work performed. In 1877 their expenses per mile navigated were 22s. 3d., whereas last year the same expenditure was at the rate of only 18s. per mile. Then, again, with almost the same number of vessels ten years ago as they had now, the tonnage had been increased by 50,000 or 60,000 tons, and they had had to work these larger ships at a reduced rate of cost, and the increased speed, as compared with ten years ago, had been from 26 to 20 per cent., and, therefore, the mere difference of 4s. per mile gave a very inadequate idea of the actual reduction in the amount of expenditure. He believed that the mail contract for Australia was in a fair way of settlement, and he believed that in the course of a few days a public announcement would probably appear that the matter was actually completed. As regarded the India and China mail contracts, when the directors accepted the new contract at the very low rate of £265,000 they were fully aware of the great difficulties that lay before them, but he might state this, that had they asked £15,000 or £20,000 a year more than they did they would in all probability have lost that mail contract altogether. He thought that in the period which they had the contract for, viz., ten years, the result of its working would prove satisfactory. They hoped to be able to work their service to the East more economically. The large steamers would leave London and return to London as at present, but instead of the branch line from Brindisi carrying the mails to Alexandria and passengers by the accelerated route having to proceed via the Egyptian railways the large steamers would touch at Brindisi on their way outwards and homewards, and passengers would be able to proceed to their destination without any transhipment, let, or hindrance. They had entered into arrangements with the Government for the placing upon a certain list three of their vessels as practically armed cruisers, and the company further entered into an agreement for the placing of certain other vessels for the same purpose upon definite terms. The Government paid the company a retaining fee on this account amounting to about £10,000 a year. These three vessels were now fitted to be able to (at twenty-four hours or less notice) take guns on board, and he need hardly add that in the event of their being required for the defence of the country it would be at no risk to the company. He thought that this arrangement between the Admiralty and themselves would be found to be mutually advantageous.

At the conclusion of his address the Chairman moved the adoption of the report and accounts, which was seconded by Mr. W. Fane de Salis, and agreed to unanimously, and resolutions were afterwards passed approving the dividend (2½ per cent.) and bonus (1 per cent.) recommended (making a total distribution for the year of 6 per cent.), and re-electing the retiring directors (the Right Hon. E. P. Bouverie and the Right Hon. Lord Sudeley) and the auditors.

The meeting terminated with a vote of thanks to the chairman and directors.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE 7th Dragoon Guards are to leave Mhow for the Rupahali Cavalry Camp on Dec. 14th. The journey will be accomplished in twenty-six marches, the distance by road being 262 miles. The camp will be reached on Jan. 12th, when the regiment will meet the Carabineers from Umballa, who exchange with the Dragoons.

COLONEL TRUMAN, commanding the 7th Dragoon Guards, will be succeeded by Lieutenant-Colonel Grant. Colonel Truman, we believe, becomes Commandant of Deolali.

THE following postings are ordered:—To 1st Battalions: Captain L. Gordon, King's Own Scottish Borderers; Captain G. Lamb and Lieutenant R. T. Kirkpatrick, Leinster Regiment; Second-Lieutenant Turner, East Lancashire Regiment; and Second Lieutenant Saulez, Suffolk Regiment. To 2nd Battalions: Captain D. A. Hamilton, East Kent Regiment; Second Lieutenant Browne, Manchester Regiment; and Second Lieutenant-Baillie, Seaforth Highlanders.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL L. G. Collum, Leinster Regiment; Captain H. M. Browne, East Lancashire Regiment; Captain D. Craigie-Halkett, Seaforth Highlanders; Lieutenant J. C. A. Anstice, 2nd Dragoon Guards; and Lieutenant H. E. Watts, 2nd Battalion West Yorkshire Regiment, have been detailed for depôt duty.

IN connection with the Burma Reliefs the 5th Bengal Infantry will probably be the first regiment to arrive back in India, about the middle of December. It has been settled that the 6th and 32nd Madras Infantry shall relieve the 14th and 17th.

A PROPOSAL is under consideration to convert the Marine Battalion into Marine Artillery. We think that the suggestion is a good one, for if the men were trained as gunners there would be ample employment for them on the fortifications.

THE appointment of Judge-Advocate-General at the headquarters of the Madras and Bombay Army is to be abolished from the 1st April next.

CHOLERA, which was lately prevalent among the troops at Lawrencepore, appears to have abated, no more cases having been reported.

WE note, in a recent Brigade Order, that the Officer Commanding the Myogyi Column was authorised to pay a reward of Rs 15 to certain Burmans for recovering in good condition a Martini-Henry rifle belonging to the mounted, R.M. Fusiliers, which was lost whilst crossing the Myogyi river when in flood. Rewards of this kind more frequently held out would ensure the return of arms similarly lost.

THE equipment and establishment of Native mountain batteries of artillery has been revised with effect from April 1 1888, one-half of the Punjab Frontier Force and Bombay mountain batteries will be armed with six 2·5-inch rifled muzzle-loading guns, and the other half with six 7-pr. rifled muzzle-loading guns of 200lbs. The batteries to be armed with the 2·5-inch guns are Nos. 1 and 3 batteries, Punjab Frontier Force, and No. 2 Bombay Mountain Battery.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL H. J. KINSMAN, R.A., Ordnance Officer 2nd class, has been reappointed for a further term of five years. Lieutenant H. A. Jennings, R.A., 4th class, Ordnance Officer, has been appointed 3rd class; Lieutenant E. S. Walker is confirmed as 4th class, and appointed to officiate as 3rd class; and Lieutenant H. Stanford, R.A., has been appointed 3rd class, sub pro tem.

IT is expected that some radical changes will be made in the military commands in India on the 1st April next. As regards the Bombay Command, the Mhow and Northern Divisions will be converted in districts, and the Brigade Command of Nusseerabad will be abolished. The Bombay District will become a Major-General's command. It is also contemplated to amalgamate the Divisional Staff offices having two staff officers, the senior to get Rs. 500 and the junior Rs. 400 staff pay per mensem, and Lieutenant-Colonels only to be appointed to the Divisional Staff.

IT has been decided that eleven instead of thirteen batteries of artillery will be maintained on a war footing in India in future, and instead of thirteen units, of three reserve ammunition waggons each, eleven will be kept up. The artillery will be located as follows:—R.H.A.: One battery at Umballa, one at Meerut, one at Kirkee, and one at Bangalore. Field Batteres: one each at Hyderabad (Sind), Kurrachee, Mooltan, Ahmednuggei, Neemuch, Kirkee, and Bangalore. Four units of reserve ammunition will be kept at Meean Meer, two at Jullundur, two at Ferozepore, two at Mooltan, and one at Sealkote.

MAJOR F. W. HEMMING, 5th Dragoon Guards, Military Secretary to H.E. the Commander-in-Chief, Madras, obtains promotion by brevet to Lieutenant-Colonel for his service in Burma. He was promoted by brevet to Major for services in Afghanistan in 1878–79.

THERE is one item of revenue, the stamp duty, which seem steadily to be increasing in all parts of the country. The last instance is that of the North-West Provinces and Oudh, where the gross receipts last year exceeded the estimate by Rs. 1,58,896. The increase was chiefly due to the sales of one anna adhesive stamps, which showed an increase of 15·5 per cent. over those of the previous year. This is said to have been in a great measure due to the more strict enforcement of the law with regard to receipt stamps among the native dealers and shopkeepers. The improvement in the trade of the provinces was also shown by a considerable increase in the sale of native hundi stamps.

PURE CONCENTRATED
COCOA

Prepared by a new and special scientific process, securing extreme solubility, and developing the finest flavour of the Cocoa.

PURE—EASILY DIGESTED—ECONOMICAL

"I consider FRY'S PURE CONCENTRATED COCOA much better and more economical for the use of troops than the usual rations of coffee and tea that are now supplied. The strengthening qualities FRY'S COCOA possesses renders it a valuable adjunct to the list of medical comforts."

JAMES C. DICKINSON,
Retired Staff Surgeon.

COMPRISING PRACTICAL RULES FOR LEARNING THE LANGUAGE, VOCABULARY DIALOGUE, LETTERS, AND IDIOMS, &c., IN ENGLISH AND ARABIC.

BY

Rev. ANTON TIEN, Ph.D., M.R.A.S.,

Hon. Curate of Holy Trinity, Milton-next-Gravesend
Medallist of the Roman University de Propaganda Fide; First Class Honour Man in Arabic, Syriac, and Hebrew; and Proxime Accessit in Classics.
Formerly First Class Interpreter to the Allied Forces the Crimea; K.C. of the Order of the Medjidie, &c., &c.; Author of the "Levant Interpreter" and the "Egyptian Handbook"; and Reviser of the Arabic Prayer Book, &c., &c.

"Dr. Tien's little book will be found a valuable guide to the traveller who wishes not so much to talk as to understand what he hears spoken and sees written in common Arabic. In the course of a hundred pages clever summary is provided of Arabic grammar, which will be found sufficient for all ordinary purposes, and which may easily be made the subject of further instruction from the native teacher."—SATURDAY REVIEW.

"The most useful portion of the book consists of the dialogues, the idiomatic exercises, the vocabulary, and other additions of practical usefulness, such as lists of official titles, of tribal names, and information on the divisions of time, on weights and measures, currency and commercial, legal, and political terms."—ATHENÆUM

"The perusal of Dr. Tien's admirable work will be of the greatest value to officers and others under orders for the East."—MORNING POST.

"Will be found very useful by soldiers, officials, students, and merchants desirous of obtaining a certain degree of proficiency in the spoken language, which is becoming in these days of increasing importance."—DAILY NEWS.

"Dr. Tien's Manual can be confidently recommended as the most simple, practical, and trustworthy guide which has yet appeared."—OVERLAND MAIL.

"The rules and explanations are clear, terse, and to the point, and we cordially recommend his book to all who wish to acquire a conversational knowledge of Arabic."—TRUBNER'S RECORD.

"The book is of a handy and convenient size, and both author and publishers have rendered important service in placing it within reach of students."—INDIAN DAILY NEWS.

"The author of the volume before us has done good service in compiling this Manual, in which the difficulties—and, it must be confessed, they are not a few—in mastering Arabic are reduced to a minimum."—BROAD ARROW.

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGIATE SCHOOL.

THE course of instruction is designed to PREPARE BOYS (Sons of Gentlemen, from 7 years of age) to occupy the positions of Land Owners and Occupiers, Land Agents, Surveyors, intending Colonists, &c. The education secured at this institution is of a very superior character, the whole object of the School being to impart a thoroughly practical and scientific knowledge of all agricultural subjects; a thorough moral, intellectual, and physical training, it pledges itself to send forth its pupils practically religious and sound scholars. The school is most pleasantly situated in a healthy locality. The greatest possible care is bestowed upon the health and domestic comfort of the pupils. The diet is excellent and unlimited. The school is very strongly recommended. References throughout Great Britain.—Address for prospectus the PRINCIPAL, Maypole Road, East Grinstead, Sussex.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

HERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

SYSTEMS OF

TESTIMONIALS.

From R. NORMAN SHAW, Architect to the Royal Academy:—

29, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C.,
February 19 1884.

The "Æolus" Waterspray Company have fixed two Air Extractors and one Air Warmer in the Life School of the Royal Academy of Arts with, we all think, the happiest results. Our troubles with that school have always been very great, as owing to the amount of gas consumed, and the necessity of keeping the school well heated on account of the Nude Models, its tendency has been to get unbearably hot, and when windows were attempted to be opened the draughts were most dangerous. It is now kept at a pleasant even temperature, and there are no draughts. The reason for this is not difficult to find. The very hot air from the steam-pipes, and the fumes from the gas, are carried off as fast as they are generated, and a continual stream of warm fresh air being supplied, the school is kept comfortable.

(Signed) R. NORMAN SHAW, R.A., Architect.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ORIGINAL AND GENUINE

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DYSENTERY, DIARRHŒA.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S (late Army Medical Staff) CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME of DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880. To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

DIAMANTÉ BRILLIANTS.

The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS originally introduced into England by the SOLE AGENTS, Messrs. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established, and the success of their enterprise has surpassed their expectations. DIAMANTÉ BRILLIANTS afford the only instance hitherto attained of the perfect representation of real Diamonds by artificial means. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real Diamonds of great value at the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grand monde and élite of society, and are now worn at the Court Balls and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly Diamond Ornaments, and can be worn at all times with confidence and security.

Every article is Mounted in 18-Carat Gold by the best Diamond Setters, exactly in the manner of the finest Brazilian Diamonds.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 9th December; from Allahabad and Madras to the 7th December; and from Calcutta to the 6th December.

THE Viceroy will probably hold a Chapter of the Indian Empire at Calcutta during the early part of next year.

NEWS has been received of the arrival of Captain Yates at Zulfikar. The escort of the 11th Bengal Lancers had joined him after a satisfactory journey through Afghanistan.

THE latest news from Afghanistan reports an ill-feeling between the Governors of Herat and Kandahar, and the Amir's dissatisfaction with the latter, which may lead to his removal for not raising sufficient reinforcements during the Ghilzai rebellion.

GENERAL GHOLAM HYDER has made his winter quarters at Mukur, where he has built extensive cantonments.

MANDALAY will soon be in direct telegraphic communication with Calcutta. The work of laying down the different sections of the line has already been begun.

GENERAL SIR H. PRENDERGAST, V.C., is to be confirmed in the appointment of British Resident in Mysore. The retirement scheme debars Sir H. Prendergast from further military employment.

THE Calcutta Chamber of Commerce has reported in favour of the abolition of the Calcutta Mint and the coinage of all bullion at Bombay.

THE Calcutta Chamber of Commerce has addressed the Chief Secretary of the Bengal Government on the injury to trade arising from the anomalous conditions of the commercial relations between India and Thibet.

THE railway extension from Kalpi to Jhansi is now complete. It will probably be open for traffic on Jan. 1st. Sir Theodore Hope has just inspected the line.

THE Viceroy has sent a letter to the Raja of Kapurthala, acknowledging H.H.'s patriotic offer to follow the Nizam's lead with a donation of five lakhs.

IT is thought that the intrigues of the Thibetans in Sikkim will be settled by the Chinese Government without recourse to active measures on our part.

COLONEL CONWAY GORDON, Director-General of State Railways, is confined to a dark room, at Delhi, with inflamed eyes. It is feared that may have to go home.

COLONL J. G. FORBES, R.E., Secretary to the North-West Government in the Irrigation Department, is to visit the locality where the gradual subsidence of the Ganges has disclosed some injury done to the Canal headworks during the recent rains.

MR. STREETER, JUNR, of the great Bond-street firm, is expected to arrive in India very shortly, en route to Burma, in connection with the negotiations for leasing the Ruby Mines.

THE Government of India have recommended to the Secretary of State the grant of a special pension of £100 a year to Mrs. Wells, the widow of the late Comptroller of Burma. Mr. Wells, it will be remembered, was drowned in the early part of this year.

Mr. G. S. FORBES, Madras Civil Service, has been appointed to officiate as Political Agent, second class, and posted as First Assistant to the Resident, Hyderabad, and Secretary for Berar.

SIR SAVALOI RAMASAMY MUDELLIAR has been appointed Sheriff of Madras.

SIR ROBERT SANDEMAN has reached Quetta.

IT is reported that the Public Service Commission is altogether against the proposal to hold simultaneous examinations in England and India. It will recommend an extension of the age for admission from nineteen to twenty-three.

THE Puttiala Durbar has agreed to construct 100 miles of broad gauge line from Puttiala to Bathinda. The Punjab Government will construct the line, and the N.W. management will work it.

THE Royal Scots Fusiliers have returned to Calcutta from Burma.

SOME excitement has been caused in Calcutta by the discovery of a large number of forged five-rupee notes. The notes are said to be excellent forgeries, and some of them have been in circulation for a long time.

THE reported approaching marriage of Sir Auckland Colvin is contradicted.

THE expenditure on construction per open mile of the Madras Railway during 1886 was Rs. 942,17, and amounted at the end of the year to a total of Rs. 1,31,265.

THE number of publications registered in Bengal last year was 2,571, or 160 less than in the year preceding. The falling-off is attributed to the non-prosperous condition of periodical literature in Bengal. The number of periodicals last year fell from 422 to 280. This is a healthy sign of the times.

MR. SCLATER, son of the Director of the Royal Zoological Gardens, becomes Deputy Superintendent of the Calcutta Museum.

A TRAVELLED Native in Calcutta is appealing to his fellow-countrymen on behalf of the poor in London.

THE St. Andrew's dinner in Calcutta was held in the Town Hall on the 30th ult. Some 225 persons were present.

THE Duke and Duchess of Montrose, Lady Helen Blackwood, and Lady Alice Fitzgerald have arrived in India by the s.s. Peshawur.

THE Calcutta Municipality have unanimously voted an extra pension of Rs. 600 a month to Mr. Robert Turnbull, their retiring Secretary.

DOCTOR MOHENDRAO LALL SIRCAR, retired Professor of Chemistry, has been appointed Sheriff of Calcutta.

ONE of the returning coolie emigrants per ship Hereford from Demerara brings back savings of one lakh eight thousand rupees

OBITUARY.—Mr. J. J. Fergusson, Official Trustee, Calcutta; Captain A. Russell, Superintendent, Prince's Dock, Bombay; Mr. Goculdas Jugmohandas, Member of the Municipal Corporation; Captain Hart, 2nd Dragoons; Mr. Maneckjee Cursetjee Shroff, J.P., late Small Cause Court Judge, Bombay.

BENGAL had, during the year 1886, 396 tea-gardens in existence, occupying a total area under cultivation of 60,745 acres, of which 51,218 acres were under mature plants, and 18,527 acres under immature plants. In addition to this the area taken up for planting, but not yet cultivated, amounts to 62,810 acres. The outturn of tea during the year is estimated to have been 16,538,395lbs., all of which was black tea. The average yield in lbs. per acre of mature plants varied from 93·5lbs. in Dakka to 408·64lbs. in Julpaiguie.

NOTES.

THE latest intelligence from India, according to the telegram sent by the Times correspondent at Calcutta, and which telegram we reproduce in our columns to-day, is that Native opinion is being exercised in consequence of a report which has got abroad that it is the intention of Government to impose an increased income-tax According to the newspapers to hand by the present Overland Mail, such a rumour was prevalent a month ago, but according to the Pioneer there was no foundation for it. "No proposals for any such increase," says that journal, "were before Government when the headquarters left Simla, and it is difficult to see how such a question can have been raised during the absence of the Viceroy on tour and the temporary dispersion of the members of Council."

IT is altogether difficult to believe that so shrewd a statesman as Lord Dufferin would introduce a measure which would spread discontent from one end of India to the other. He has the knowledge at his command of how unsuitable this tax has been to India in the past, and how it has been detested by Europeans and Natives alike. It was always unfair in its incidence, for it fell heavily upon Government servants having a fixed income, upon professional men, and upon English merchants who disdained to lie regarding their resources as the Native traders did. The profits of those traders could never be ascertained, for they declined to show their books, or produced false ones for the purpose. But the inquisitorial nature of the tax made it more detested still by all. Assessments were made arbitrarily and unmercifully, and the tax was both unjust and oppressive. It placed the Natives at the mercy of the tax-gatherer, the policeman, and their personal enemies, and the irritation felt in consequence was great and widespread.

WE are writing of the early days of the imposition of the tax. Latterly it was modified and did not press on the masses, and the agricultural classes were practically exempted. Divested of its first irritating surroundings it was mainly levied on the inhabitants of cities and Government officials, but when it ceased to be generally oppressive it ceased also to be remunerative. The produce of it was not worth the ill-feeling which it still created, and so it was abandoned as a tax which led to nothing but confusion, scandal, and discontent.

REIMPOSED in a more modified form it has been borne with—for Englishmen after all get used to taxation, even as eels are said to accommodate themselves to skinning. But to revert to the old evil system and attempt to gain revenue by a wider expansion or heavier increase of the Income-tax will be to awaken discontent and to spread it amongst all classes of the community in India, and this is surely the most unlikely thing which the Government would attempt to do at this moment. Our boast in that country and at home is that India at present is quiet, happy, and prosperous under British rule, and that the loyalty of her Princes, Chiefs, and peoples is outspoken, deep, and sincere. We do not think that Lord Dufferin is likely to imperil so satisfactory a position.

WHILE, however, an Income-tax is decidedly unpopular it is strange to learn that a capitation tax, which is the most direct of all taxes, would be preferred by the Natives. Years ago, when the Income-tax was first imposed in India, a Native writer of great thought and power—one of the accomplished Dutt family—advocated a capitation tax instead. "If," he wrote at the time, "the form be changed to a capitation tax of varying rates there would, we think, be no objection to pay almost any rate that might be asked. Our objection to direct taxes generally holds good, but this is one of those direct taxes which are in accordance with Native notions, and while fulfilling in a defective form the object of a license and certificate tax, it would leave no door open for extortion, as the rates to be realised under it would be exactly known." The argument is specious, but a tax which is altogether unsound in principle was not likely to find favour with English financiers. The Times correspondent recommends that tobacco be made a Government monopoly as opium is; but we would ask him how in a country where every Native who has a patch of ground almost can grow sufficient tobacco for his own consumption, smuggling is to be prevented and revenue raised? The cost of the official machinery to carry out such a project would be enormous. And a tobacco monopoly or tax would hardly be a popular one. Tobacco smoking in the East is not, as the Times correspondent puts it, "one of the superfluities or luxuries of life." It may be regarded so by political or financial economists, but in India it is looked upon as a necessary of life.

OF course it will be argued that tobacco is not such a necessity to the Natives of India as salt, and yet we tax salt. To those who understand how the incidence of the salt tax falls no explanation is necessary; to those who do not no space which we could command in these columns would be of any avail. They will continue to misunderstand the matter and to abuse the Government of India, and will remain unconverted to the fact that the salt tax is no burden whatever to the "down-trodden millions" of India, as psuedo-philanthropists sometimes designate the masses of that country. If a tax on tobacco or betel-leaf could be as easily and satisfactorily gathered, there might possibly be no objection. But it is, as we have said, the difficulty of providing an economical and efficient method of raising such a tax which stands in the way.

THE enlightened Hindu writer from whom we have already quoted asks, "Why may not the Government impose a marriage tax? The marriage expenses amongst all classes are extravagant, and even a stiff tax would not be felt as a grievance, for it would not materially affect the expenditure. At all events, those who spend thousands and tens of thousands on such occasions can well afford to pay a fee to the Government, and will never demur if called upon to do so." This opinion is we know endorsed by many Natives, but the suggestion has been rejected by successive Indian Finance Ministers, who have come to the conclusion that neither a marriage tax or marriage license would be a suitable tax for the Natives. But the reasons have not been given for this belief.

OUR Native friend gave long ago a valuable hint to such Ministers—a hint full of common sense and thorough loyalty to the Paramount Power. "Why," said he, "not say honestly to the Natives: 'We must have so much money; it is absolutely necessary for carrying on our form of Government properly; tell us how your people would wish to make up the amount?' Take the people honestly into your confidence, and they will cheerfully assist you out of your financial difficulties and blunderings. No man in India is unwilling to pay the fairest quota claimable from him for the stability and prosperity of the British Government in it; and of this the British Government itself ought to be well assured."

HAD such advice been followed we should have heard less of "Young India" and "Bengali Babúdom" and their protests against the despotism of Anglo-Indian officials. It is satisfactory to find the Times, in its comments on Sir Lepel Griffin's speech at Gwalior, as wired by its correspondent, declaring that Sir Lepel's main argument is unanswerable. We commend the perusal of that speech to our readers, feeling certain that all except the Radical sympathisers with Indian and Irish sedition will endorse its sentiments. And the Native Congress which meets to-day at Madras will do well to take the lesson it conveys to heart. And that lesson is pithily summed up by the Times in advising that the Bengali Babús, who are bent on reforming Anglo-Indian administration, and on doing the work at good salaries, had better settle matters first with the Mahrattas, the Rajpoots, the Sikhs, and, above all, with the Mahomedans. Having done this they can then ask leave to govern India for themselves.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, Dec. 25.

The two domestic topics which chiefly appear to engross Native opinion at present are the whispered suggestion of an increased income-tax and the forthcoming meeting of the Native congress at Madras. The so-called Native public opinion in India is in many instances, and in nearly all political matters, simulated, insincere, and factitious. It is the mere windy reverberation of the noisy though earnest clamour of political strife in England. A certain small section of the community has been taught, as the result of high English education, that the logical duty is imposed upon its members to adopt the rôle of political martyrs, and while posing as irreconcilable enemies to the English Government in India in the burlesque-masquerade of Native Hampdens, they are expected to advocate extravagant Radical proposals, which, if once accepted by a weak and mischievous Government, would render all future administration in India utterly impracticable. This is thoroughly understood by the majority of those Natives who have a sufficient material interest in the prosperity of the country adequately to appreciate all the evil effects which would arise as the immediate consequence of a weak and unstable administration. These men are strongly opposed to political phrasemongering and periodic though effervescent platform agitations, and advocate as a necessary condition precedent to political reform the absolute necessity for social reformation.

But strongly as men of this class object to the mischievous fussiness of spurious political turmoils they are sincere and bitter opponents of the income-tax. Direct taxation is more calculated to foster discontent and sedition in India than any other possible cause. It is not only hated because it is inquisitorial, but more especially because it has afforded an apology for wholesale robbery and oppression. It will be a very disastrous policy should the Government make any attempt to increase this hateful form of taxation. No doubt the sources of revenue are somewhat inelastic, but there must be many directions in which a scientific financier would see his way to redeem the finances from their present unfortunate, paralytic condition.

Burma has a magnificent future. The obvious way to mitigate the burden imposed upon the Indian finances by the heavy expenditure involved in its pacification would be to raise a Burma loan, guaranteed by the Indian Government. In this way Burma would cease to be an incubus upon the revenues of India, and by temporarily discounting her brilliant future, would be enabled easily to pay her way in the present, and thus to remove the only ground of reproach associated with the annexation. Then, again, a prolific source of revenue would be a State monopoly of tobacco. As the revenue from opium gradually declines, tobacco might well take its place. This tax would reach all classes, and yet could hardly be open to the objection that it is a tax upon necessaries. Even for the poor man tobacco must always be regarded by economists as one of the superfluities or luxuries of life. It has been also calculated that a very large revenue can be raised from kerosine oil, as it is used universally, and its consumption is therefore enormous. For the same reason European umbrellas would afford a large fiscal income. I only mention these items as showing in how many new directions a skilled financier might revive and develop our prostrate finances.

The Madras Chamber of Commerce has written to the Government supporting the representation of the Bengal Chamber, suggesting the necessity of making such changes in the Indian Council's Act as will permit of an annual discussion of the Budget in the Legislative Council. The letter states that the Government has nothing to fear from such a discussion, since its aim is not to shelter the theories of the Finance Minister from legitimate criticism at the hands of men of practical experience, but to do what is best calculated to promote the finance and the general welfare of the country. The recent recourse to a form of taxation that has been unequivocally condemned as unsuitable for India by three successive Finance Ministers, and the apprehension that further taxation is imminent, are arguments that may be employed in support of the contention that the country should be allowed a real voice in the management of financial affairs.

The Native Congress will meet at Madras on Tuesday next, the 27th instant. It is expected that 600 delegates will be present. The Mahomedans from this side of India have declined to be represented. All social questions have been excluded from the programme of discussion. The topics reserved for consideration will be—reforms of the Legislative Councils, military expenditure, the Arms Act, the separation of Burma from the Indian Empire, the question of a deputation to England to urge the resolutions of the Congress on the English public and Parliament, the poverty of India, the separation of judicial from executive functions, and the expected deficit in the Budget.

Sir Lepel Griffin, the Governor-General's Agent for Central India, has recently taken advantage of the opportunity of a public ceremonial at the capital of the Gwalior State to express some very strong political convictions in very trenchant and bitter language. After dwelling at considerable length on the many advantages which the Maharattas would derive from a close application to the acquirement of Oriental and Western learning, Sir Lepel Griffin delivers himself as follows:—

"One of the reasons for which I urge you Mahrattas to utilize the educational advantages which we offer you is, that you may take your rightful intellectual place in India, and keep the Bengalees, who are now everywhere very active, in their proper place. You are their superiors in ability, in strength, and in courage; they are only your superiors in noise and volubility. If they should be your leaders it would be an army of lions commanded by grasshoppers. If you look at the history of the world you will find that strong nations like the English, the Mahrattas, the Rajpoots, and Sikhs were never ruled by weak and unwarlike races like the Bengalees. Courage is the quality which governs the world, and the bravest people are everywhere and justly triumphant. Do not then allow the Bengalees to deceive you with their talk about national congresses and representative institutions. Be content with your own Mahratta nationality, and believe me that representative institutions are as much suited to India as they are to the moon. India is composed of many different nations, with very little in common; and it is as foolish to hope to unite them as to join in one nation Russians, Frenchmen, and Englishmen, who are more closely connected by civilization and descent than the various peoples of India.

"The so called 'National' Congress is a sham, and the delegates are only appointed by themselves and their friends. Hindoos of position and authority will not join it, and the only Mahomedans who attend are a few obscure and notoriety-seeking persons. How do you believe that anything national can come out of a meeting where the chief promoters have lost their own nationality, and have adopted the dress and food and ways of foreigners?

"My advice to you Mahrattas is to distrust Natives of India who have given up their caste and their national dress to cherish and observe your ancient and noble religion, cherish and observe strictly your rules of caste—which missionaries and philanthropists tell you is a bad thing, but which is in reality the mortar which holds together the building of Indian society. If you take it away nothing will be left but ruins. There are many bad and inconvenient things in caste, but its advantages are greater than its evils. We cannot have perfection, and if we destroyed everything that was not perfect, we should have to get rid of all our friends, and possibly make away with ourselves."

There is a certain amount of truth in these home thrusts, though they have only a qualified and partial application. This is intended by Sir L. Griffin as a counterblast. For some time back he has been bitterly and even scandalously assailed by a portion of the Bengalee Press. It was rumoured that he was prevented by the Viceroy, for political reasons, from prosecuting his opponents. Whether this be so or not he has now taken a most complete and satisfying revenge, for though every shaft winged from his quiver of caustic rhetoric was gathered by a personal sense of injury and wounded vanity, he has fully succeeded in his object of acutely punishing Bengalee susceptibility. Fortunately for him his Indian career is practically closed, otherwise it would be doubtful whether, though equipped as he is with unbounded audacity, he would have dared to affront the hypersensitive vanity of the political spoilt infant whom the Indian Government delights to pamper.

The members of the Public Service Commission have concluded their sittings. Sir Charles Aitchison made a short speech, and thanked the members on behalf of the Viceroy. He stated that the report would be made public as soon as the Secretary of State accorded permission.

Captain St. John Michell, a very able officer of the Intelligence Department, commands an expedition which is to survey the country between the Assam frontier and the Hukong Valley. The main object of this expedition is to develop the overland route from Assam to Burma. It would be difficult to over-estimate its importance, as, if successful, there would be no necessity for despatching Native troops to Burma by sea.

An important arrest has been effected in the Punjab. Pertab Singh, a sort of plenipotentiary of the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, and of some notoriety as a successful sedition-monger, has been seized, apparently redhanded.

THE following is a programme of the Burma reliefs for the season. The dates shown are those sailing from Rangoon for India:—Cavalry—3rd Hyderabad Contingent in parts on the 26th and 31st January, and 5th February; 1st Bombay Lancers, 28th February, 3rd and 5th March; 7th Bengal Cavalry, 24th, 28th, and 30th March. Artillery—1-1 the Eastern Division, 16th April. Infantry—5th Bengal, 17th December; 21st Madras, 4th January; 1st Bengal, 22nd January; 14th Madras, 13th February; 17th Madras, 1st March; 3rd Hyderabad, 17th March; 27th Punjab, 2nd April; 5th Bombay, 18th April; 2nd Hyderabad, 18th March, and 25th Bombay, 23rd March.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

(Pioneer.)

If we may judge both from his recorded opinions and his general policy, no one is more fully alive to the necessity of not sacrificing the essentials of good government to mere sentimental sympathy with the past. We cannot stand still, as he has expressed it, and shut out the rush of light and air which have followed our throwing open the windows of the West. "We must continue to enlist the best men in our service whoever they may be; and we must govern the country, at any cost, on the principles of order and progress, of civil liberty and religious equality." . . . "Our raison d'etre in India, and our motto for ruling it must ever be La carriere ouverte aux talents" . . . "We cannot undertake in any way the spiritual direction of Hindoos; but neither are we prepared to take lessons from them upon questions of public morality." These quotations, in our opinion, strike the keynote of the policy of this Government during the last five years. Its chief has stood at the dividing of the ways, the one pointing to the political ideals of ancient India, the other to the modern conceptions of the functions of the State. An impartial review of the last five years and a comparative survey of the conduct of Provincial administration in other parts of India lead, in our opinion, to the conclusion that Sir Alfred Lyall's Government has been a distinct success, that it has fulfilled the promise of his previous brilliant career and his great reputation, that his sympathetic comprehension and unrivalled knowledge of the Oriental character have enabled him to exercise a personal influence of the best kind over many of his subjects, that he has maintained and increased the dignity of his high office, that he has efficiently administered affairs and promoted many important reforms, and that he leaves a loyal and prosperous people united in an honest regret that the days of his Indian service are completed.

BREACH OF GOOD FAITH.

(Englishman.)

Now that the Government is sorely pushed for funds, why does it insist on working the Income-tax Office in such a way as probably to lessen the collections by several lakhs a year? Let any business man pay a visit to the collectorate. He will see at a glance that the establishment is quite unable to cope with the demands made upon it. From the highest to the lowest everyone is at high pressure, and it is only a question of time when the collapse will come. This collapse will probably not be regretted from a public point of view whatever Government might think. In connection with the collection of the income-tax we have a very serious matter to bring to the notice of the public. It has been clearly understood, almost from the day on which the income-tax was imposed, that all declarations of income would be held as strictly confidential and that they would not be allowed to go out of the hands of the Collector himself; and with this arrangement everyone was entirely satisfied. But a great change has been made—a change that will be received with intense dissatisfaction and dislike by all communities. It seems that, by a recent Order of the Board of Revenue, the system that has been hitherto in force, by which the Collector has been enabled to keep the necessary particulars furnished by the public entirely to himself, has been abolished, and that all returns relating to incomes are in future to be thrown open to the whole office. Now the Government of India pledged itself that every precaution would be taken to prevent the private affairs of those who had to make returns becoming known through the medium of the authorities, and it even went so far as to have printed on the top of the tax form a note to the effect that the communication "is to be returned in sealed covers and addressed to the Collector, and marked confidential"; from which it was inferred that Government intended to keep its word as far as secrecy was concerned. Of course, it follows that the collector of the tax must obey orders, and can therefore justly be absolved from all blame. But whoever is responsible for such an order is guilty of one of the most flagrant breaches of good faith which has ever come to the notice of the public. As matters now stand, the income of all mercantile firms—all private individuals—will become public property; and from what has recently been published in certain Native papers, we may confidently expect to see very shortly, in their columns, tables giving the financial position of Calcutta firms. The question now rests with the public, and it is for them to determine whether they will submit to have their private affairs blazoned abroad, or whether they will take steps to bring before the notice of the Viceroy in Council the way in which his pledged word has been broken, it may be through want of thought, by some official in the Board of Revenue.

THE INCREASE OF THE INCOME-TAX.

(Indian Planters' Gazette.)

The Government of India have kindly passed on the question of the abolition of the Calcutta Mint to the Calcutta Chamber of Commerce for its opinion. Will the Government pass on to the same body, to the Trades' Association, and to the various Planters' Associations, a letter asking for their opinion of the Income-tax? The question can safely be answered. The Government will do nothing of the kind. It has got hold of a possibly elastic source of income, and it will keep hold of it. Before the Government returns to Simla in March the whole matter will be settled. The Budget Statement will show the usual deficit so familiar in recent years and the Indian high priest of finance will say that this deficit is mainly due to three causes, namely, the annexation of Burma, the depreciated rupee, and the fall in opium. In these circumstances, as the Government will not reimpose the import duties on cotton goods nor meddle with the salt tax—the only tax that reaches the bulk of the people of India—there is nothing for it but to increase the Income-tax, for the land-owners are in too unsettled a state, especially in Bengal, where the echoes of the Rent Bill have scarcely died away, to submit meekly to any increase of the land-tax. The Income-tax, then, is the sheet-anchor of the Government, and the Government will, next January, as cleverly as it did last, arrange the whole matter before the European population of India, on whom this tax presses with cruel severity, have realised the full impost of the measures introduced. During the first year of its working the Government has been exceedingly careful not to worry any man, and to carry on the collection of the impost as far as possible with establishments already in existence. It was altogether a tentative measure which the Government of India plausibly palavered into law and kept in existence for a year. It can now state that the tax has been collected during that period, and no record of gross oppression or hardship has been made public. Of course there has not, for the simple reason that no proper establishment for the proper collecting of the tax has been sanctioned, and the work has gone on from month to month somehow. Next year all this will be changed; separate establishments will be granted, and our Aryan brothers who may not in the past year have had the pleasure of forming the acquaintance of the Collector of Income-tax will next year have that pleasure.

THE MARRIAGE LAW OF BURMA.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The learned Judges of the Special Court of British Burma have at length published their decision on the marriage law of Burma. It appears that the Recorders of Rangoon have interpreted a very obscure and single sentence of the Buddhist Law of Manu in such a way as to reduce marriage to the level of concubinage. Under these repeated decisions of the Recorders, several immoral practices grew up in Rangoon, where women, wishing to consort with their paramours, quoted the rulings about divorce on mere caprice and defied the husbands to take any legal steps against them. To add to the absurdity of the legal situation, the Recorders next treated as "established customs" these disreputable practices, which were the fruit of the decisions interpreting the ancient text of Manu. A few years ago the Buddhist Law was discovered to be a mere version of the Indian Manu, and thereupon doubts were at once suggested as to the soundness of the Recorder's interpretation. The Judicial Commissioners disputed his law and refused to enforce the doctrine of divorce as mere caprice in the territory outside Rangoon. The two Judges have at last considered the subject, and expressed an opinion that the Recorder was wrong. They hold that the one fantastic text on which alone these rulings had been misunderstood, and that the immoral customs hitherto imputed to the Buddhists, to their great scandal and disgust, have no existence. The many texts quoted by the learned Judges show clearly that the Buddhist Law equally with the Hindu Law throws a strong protection over married life. It is something to get a grievous error put right, even after the lapse on many years. But it is impossible to recompense the husbands and wives who have been forced to submit to the older decisions and whose domestic happiness was ruined through the general ignorance of the meaning of Indian Manu. We are informed that the Roman Catholic Bishop, Monsignor Bigandet, and two of the Commissioners of Divisions, Colonel Street and Colonel Plant, came forward some years ago, and stated officially that the "custom" judicially imputed to the Burmans was mere imagination, although practices universally considered immoral were becoming prevalent at Rangoon. The decision we publish practically confirms their opinion.

THE P. AND O.

(Madras Mail.)

No British line of steamships is more liberally subsidised, or patronised, than the P. and O, and the prestige gained from being the Government Mail steamers has obtained for its vessels an advantage which no other line running to India possesses. The Company gets the cream of the passenger trade, and commands better freights for cargo than the usual run of steamers. Punctuality in the date of sailing gives it a very great pull over all competitors. It is of no small importance to an intending passenger that he can reckon on the day and hour when a ship will sail, and if he comes from up-country, or any great distance, it is all the more important, as he is saved hotel expenses and discomforts which, in the case of uncertain steamers, might have to be endured. To men going home on short leave it is a great matter that no time be lost on the way. Certainly in the time of sailing is likewise an advantage to the shipper of cargo who can calculate almost to a day when his goods will arrive; and sales made in advance under such conditions have a better value than when they are absent. The punctuality and regularity which the Mail service requires must continue to give the P. and O. Company's vessels a preference both with passengers and shippers. If the rates of passage were more moderate, and the steamers were larger, the Company would undoubtedly obtain even a larger share of the passenger trade than they do now. The Company seems, however, to take advantage of the position the Mail service gives it to keep up the rates, and to postpone improvements. It is not until it comes into direct competition with other Companies that it keeps pace with its contemporaries. Witness its ridiculously low rates of passage to Australia compared with its rates between India and England. For £2 more than you pay from London to Bombay you can go on to Australia, double the distance! A return passage from India to any Australian port as far as Sydney, is only Rs. 600; while to England, for the return voyage, occupying about the same time, Rs. 900 is the charge, or half as much again. This looks uncommonly like an attempt to mulct Anglo-Indian Peter for the benefit of Anglo-Australian Paul.

There was such a run on the Victoria that 250 first-class passengers travelled by her, or about 100 more than she had first-class accommodation for. The Company being naturally reluctant to refuse the extra number, succeeded in arranging with them to put up with second saloon berths. From reports which have appeared the latter did not altogether enjoy their accommodation. What do 250 passengers mean to the Company? Taking the rate of passage roughly at £60 each it gives a gross sum of £15,000, a pretty fair amount to earn in three weeks. The Brindisi passengers were on board some 13 days. The shorter the passage the less costly the commissariat. Besides the large earnings from passage-money, the vessels are floating liquor shops, where large quantities of liquor are sold at prices which must prove much more profitable than on shore, for no excise duty thereon is paid, and no trade rivalry is possible. The Company will have little to boast of until it has lowered the record, not merely to 21 days, but to something nearer 15 to 16, and has arranged to carry passengers at 20 to 30 per cent. less than at present.

The Company's new vessels are furnished with many conveniences, but the Directors never seem to have thought of providing special accommodation for the many invalids whom they carry. The Indian climate often sends persons home who are suffering from its baneful effects—persons prostrated by long continued fever, victims of dysentery, abscess of the liver, or other maladies. It would be a boon to such invalids themselves, and a great comfort to their fellow-passengers, if separate accommodation and attendance were secured for them. A little special comfort and attendance in a separate part of the ship, away from the crowd of passengers, may prove of inestimable value to the sufferers, and aid in saving their lives. The discomforts of a crowded and noisy ship in the Arabian and Red Seas too often prove fatal to the hopes of those who count every day till they reach the health-restoring breezes of the Mediterranean, which they fondly believe will work a speedy cure. Many invalid passengers would be willing to pay extra for the advantages of quiet, space and special attendance.

BENGAL.

THE office of the Superintendent of Pensions in Calcutta is likely to be abolished before long.

THE Bengal Board of Revenue has called the special attention of all revenue officers and managers of the estates under the Court of Wards to the steady decrease, for the last three years, in the percentage of recoveries under decrees in their favour. The Lieutenant-Governor drew attention to this fact in his resolution on the Legal Remembrancer's Report in September last, and the Board have now directed that the work of realisation must be carried out with greater energy.

A DETACHMENT of Salvationists have, it appears, penetrated into Sylhet, where they intend to carry on the war among the tea planters and their coolies.

CONSEQUENT on the death of Mercury several fresh entries have been made for the Viceroy's Cup in the forthcoming Calcutta races.

MR. E. J. SINKINSON has taken up his appointment as officiating Financial Secretary at Calcutta.

THE Civil Service Dinner at Calcutta has been fixed for the 29th December. A large gathering is expected.

THE Government of India has asked the Bengal Government for a statement showing the exact cost of translating and reporting on the Vernacular Press in Bengal.

MR. NEY ELIAS has arrived in India, and will, it is understood, be employed on special duty n the Foreign Department of the Government.

CALCUTTA is exercised at the discovery that a large number of forged five-rupee notes have been in circulation for a long time. The imitation is excellent.

THE Public Service Commission is now meeting every other day in Calcutta. The principal issues still under consideration are the questions of an imperial and local service, the proportionate number of posts to be given in each, the liability of Civilians to transfer from province to province, and the raising of the limit of age in the Civil Service competition.

AT a meeting of the Senate of the Calcutta University Sir Alfred Croft proposed that the report of the Special Committee on the Entrance Examination should be adopted. Dr. Rajendra Lala Mitra moved that chemistry be omitted altogether, and that the marks for English be reduced from 200 to 150. After an animated discussion Sir Alfred Croft's original proposition was accepted. Both sides are commended strongly as to the regularity and order of voting. The subject will be revised before the Syndicate with a view to being sent back to the Senate.

THE Englishman states that supplies of Tibetan wool are now arriving more freely in Darjeeling, and the quality is such, and the price at which it can be purchased from Tibetan traders at Darjeeling so reasonable, as to show that a very valuable trade, which would produce important results affecting the future prosperity of Darjeeling, is ready to our hands awaiting development. The realignment and improvement of the road through Sikkim is declared necessary to develop this trade, as was recently stated in the Pioneer. Mr. Girdlestone and Mr. Paul recently met at Kalimpong to confer on this very point.

THE report of the Sanitary Commissioner in Assam, which was four months behind time in making its appearance, remarks on the deplorable waste of life in the Dibrugarh dispensary, where 30 per cent. of the in-patients died last year. There seems to be a doubt whether the great mortality be due to the mode of daily life of the coolies on tea-gardens or to the delay by sick coolies in going to the dispensary, or to the "notoriously inferior physique" of the class of coolies imported into the Lakhimpur district. The Chief Commissioner inclines to the last view, but asks for detailed and accurate information.

SIR ALEXANDER WILSON, presiding at the St. Andrew's dinner in Calcutta, gave a survey of the position of the Government. As a proof of the wonderful development of the country, he pointed to the fact that during the reign of the Queen-Empress the commerce of India had increased tenfold. The paramount claim of Calcutta to the retention of her proud pre-eminence as the capital of India was vindicated. Calcutta, he pointed out, has to minister to the wants of at least 125 out of the 252 millions of the population, while the bulk of her trade and the variety of her special staples place her beyond the fear of competition. Railway extension, frontier defences, native loyalty, and financial exigencies were among the subjects upon which the Chairman touched. His remarks on the Income-tax are perhaps most deserving of note, if only because of the remarkable outburst of enthusiasm with which they were received. "I trust," he said, "that in the near future it may be found possible to revert to those forms of taxation which, while they existed, this country never felt, and the repeal of which has not benefited a single inhabitant. Direct taxation on income is utterly unsuited to the people of India, and experience has shown how meagre a return it brings compared with the wide dissatisfaction which it causes." This is the popular verdict on the Income-tax, and it was, says the Englishman, impossible to listen to the roar of approval with which these opinions were echoed without feeling that public sympathy was dead against the Government in this matter. There was no mistaking the nature of the demonstration; it was no mere ebullient caprice of the moment, but a unanimous condemnation of the most obnoxious impost that has been known in India in recent years.

MADRAS.

THE Commander-in-Chief of Madras arrived at Nagpore on Dec. 3, and was met at the station by a volunteer guard-of-honour. He inspected the Madras lines, and examined the ground for the magazine, and left the same afternoon.

THE Natives of Madras have requested the Madras Standard to open a fund to receive subscriptions to recoup Mr. Morgan for the heavy loss sustained by him in prosecuting Mr. Ross. The Natives are very indignant at the result of the case.

THE Board of Directors, considering it highly desirable that the Agent and Manager of the Madras Railway should have a Native Assistant, have, subject to the confirmation of Government, sanctioned such an appointment, carrying with it a salary of Rs. 250, rising to Rs. 300 by annual increments of Rs. 25, and thereafter by bi-annual increments of Rs. 25 to Rs. 400 per mensem.

A MEETING of the General Committee for the Celebration of the Jubilee of the Queen-Empress in Madras was held on the 1st inst. in the Banqueting Hall, Madras, to receive Her Majesty's gracious reply to the Madras Presidential Address; to confirm the appointment by the executive committee of a sub-committee to arrange for the formation of the Victoria Technical Institute as a Presidential Memorial of the Jubilee; and to dissolve the general and executive committee. His Excellency the Governor presided.

AT the meeting held to dissolve the General Jubilee Committee, his Excellency the Governor in the chair, votes of thanks were given to all who had interested themselves, particularly to Sir C. Lawson. The latter, in reply, said: "Not the least agreeable of the many bright incidents of my late mission was that I was told by several influential and impartial observers in England that in their opinion the Madras Presidency had by the unique method of emphasising its loyalty done better than any part of Her Majesty's dominions."

THE Army Sanitary Commission, in their Memorandum on Fairs and Festivals held within the Madras Presidency during the year 1886, point to the great danger of overcrowding during cholera periods. As a striking illustration of this, the town of Bhadrachalam, in the Godavari district, is mentioned. The town itself had accommodation for its population of 2,000; but some 20,000 pilgrims arriving from a cholera affected district—all more or less predisposed to cholera—were crowded into the houses. The result was that there were twenty deaths from cholera. The festivals described in the reports dealt with by the Sanitary Commission were ninety-one in number, and the pilgrims present at them amounted to above two and a-quarter millions. At ninety fairs there was no cholera. Bhadrachalam was the only town that suffered. The memorandum concludes with the following remarks:—"The practical result of the year's experience is to show the nature of sanitary measures to be adopted against cholera in the towns and villages of Madras, and it is high time that the village populations were dealt with on such principles, so as to secure to those remaining at home an immunity from cholera similar to that afforded to those who went on pilgrimage in 1886."

BOMBAY.

MR. W. A. EAST, C.S., has been allowed to return to duty within the period of his leave.

MR. G. C. WHITWORTH is appointed Judge and Sessions Judge of Rutnagherry.

MAJOR M. R. WYER has resigned his commission in the Bombay Volunteer Rifle Corps.

A Government Gazette notifies that H.E. the Governor has been pleased to accept the resignation of the Hon. J. Macpherson, B.A., as an additional member of Council.

THE appointment of Mr. F. L. Latham, Advocate-General, as an additional member of Council in the place of the Hon. Mr. Macpherson, is announced.

DR. PETERSON has been nominated by the Ratepayers' Association as a candidate for the vacant seat in the Municipal Corporation of Bombay, created by the death of Mr. Goculdas Jugmohundas.

MR. BADROODIN TYEBJEE, who had been for some time suffering from an affection of the eyes, and had to go to England to avail himself of the best medical treatment there, having returned to Bombay a few days ago, has resumed practice at the Bar.

MR. CORDERY has returned to Hyderabad. It is rumoured that he has been requested to stay for another year.

THERE has been, the Deccan Times hears, a disagreement amongst the scholastic staff of the Madrassa-i-Aliya, or Nizam's College, which is likely to result in the removal of one of the staff.

THE amount payable by the Nizam's Government as guaranteed interest on the Railway for the half-year ending this month is nearly £70,000. This will amount to about nine and a half lakhs of Government rupees, towards which the net earnings of the line for the half-year which ended in June and the balance of the Berar Surplus, amounting to about six lakhs of Government rupees, are available.

A TELEGRAM from Hongkong, dated December 6th, states that during the preceding fortnight the sales of Indian yarn amounted to 5,200 bales, the exchange on Bombay being quoted at Rs. 222¾ per 100 dollars, and at Shanghai Rs. 306½ per 100 taels. The effect of this telegram on the Bombay yarn market has been to effect a reduction of one-sixteenth of an anna per lb.

IT is now certain that Lord Reay will visit Rajkote about the end of December. At Rajkote he will distribute prizes to students attending the Rajkoomar College, and thence will proceed to Gondal. At Gondal his Excellency will perform the ceremony of turning the first sod of a new railway line from Porebunder to Gondal. He will afterwards go on to Porebunder via Jerpur to inspect the harbour. From Porebunder his Excellency will return to Bombay by sea.

NATIVE PRESS.

THE NIZAM'S OFFER.

What we imagined has come to pass. Following the example of the Nizam, the Maharajah of Kapurthala has offered to pay to the English Government rupees five lakhs, and to place his troops at the disposal of that Government for the defence of the Indian Empire. Who can say that other Native Princes will not imitate the Nizam and this Maharajah? But it is not proper for the English who are the Paramount Power in India, to accept pecuniary assistance from the Native Princes. In 1820, the then Nizam, in order to show gratitude to the English, offered five lakhs of rupees for the improvement of Calcutta, the metropolis of British India. The English then had wealth, and respect for dignity and prestige. So they did not accept that offer. But now they are in great pecuniary difficulties and think less of their dignity.—The Bangabasi.

The Nizam has made an offer and the Government has accepted it. What right have the public to comment on this? The offer is not made for the performance of some ceremony, or for relieving the sufferings of the poor. It is for the defence of India, by strengthening the frontiers against foreign aggressions. Money may be paid and life may be sacrificed for the welfare of the King. The money offered by the Nizam will cause a belief that money is the sole means for the defence of India. But this belief is ruinous. It is doubtful whether India will be saved even if the Khyber Pass be closed with heaps of money. The Nizam has, by this offer, greatly enhanced the reliance of the English Government upon money. In fact, India has been a great sufferer by this offer. Lakhs of money have been offered to a Government which refuses to admit Natives as Volunteers. The value of wealth has been enhanced and that of life decreased. The condition of other Princes has been made more critical. With millions of hands raised the people of India will say that "this is not a gift, but a punishment." The money which will be spent on strengthening the frontier would have done great good in the way of the defence of the Indian Empire, if spent for the welfare of her weak people. The Nizam's gift is a punishment to India. Its poisonous effects will be apparent if other Native Princes follow his example.—The Charuvarta.

TIBET AND SIKKIM.

Why the English are so desirous of commercial dealings with Tibet is very mysterious. They never make any assertions in plain language. But sensible people understand that for fear of Russia they wish to strengthen themselves on all sides. They will easily be able to place troops on the frontier if they can occupy Tibet. Some time ago Mr. Macaulay was ready to start for Tibet on a mission. But that was not done, on account of the objections raised by Tibet. The Burmese war was then going on. Therefore, the English could not then undertake a war. Now the Burmese war has to some extent subsided, so they have renewed their efforts in that direction. If Tibet be annexed, Sikkim will have to be brought under control. So assertions are now being made regarding the irregularities in the administration of Sikkim. We will not now say what the English will decide about Sikkim. Our readers will be able to know all particulars in the course of two or four months. But the English should bear in mind that "too much greed brings ruin on the weaver."—The Praja Bandhu.

The visit of Mr. Paul to Sikkim is not free from apprehensions. The English Government has heard that the failure of Mr. Macaulay's Mission to Tibet has enhanced the pride of the Tibetans, who are slighting the English very much, and trying to establish supremacy in Sikkim by oppressing the people. So Mr. Paul has gone to Sikkim with a view to check the Tibetans, and troops are in readiness on the Sikkim frontiers. They will fight as soon as war is declared. This has caused our apprehensions. — The Bangabasi.

DHULIP SINGH.

It is stated in the Russian newspaper that Dhulip Singh's Indian subjects are rejoicing in the hope of his return. On the other hand, a proclamation, signed by Dhulip Sing and Jamaluddin, has been published in Paris. Its object is to excite the Natives of India against the English. We do not know which Native of India is assisting Dhulip with money and writing him letters. Although those traitors have come forward to assist him secretly, they will not help him when the time for action arrives. We warn him not to be betrayed by those wicked men. We beg to tell him another thing. Those who are assisting him are neither Hindus nor Mahomedans. If he comes with the assistance of the Russians, then no Indian Mahomedan will join him.—The Dakka Prokash.

Who can say that the proclamation of Dhulip published by the Standard is not forged? What is said to have been issued from Paris may be issued from London. There is a class of Englishmen and Anglo-Indians who think that the more the Natives of India are cowed the better it is for the British prestige in India. We cannot say that in order to realise this end such device has not been resorted to by some wicked Englishman or

Anglo-Indian. If the proclamation be real, it will even then do no good. The people of India are not so insane as to join a madman. So long as the British Government keeps them contented no one will be able to excite them. But no one will be able to save the British Government if it makes them discontented. For the sake of presumptuous Anglo-Indians discontent is being sown in India. Efforts ought to be made that it may not be extended. The people of India are still hearily loyal.—The Dainik and Chandrika.

THE ENGLISH RULE IN INDIA.

The question whether the English rule is beneficial or injurious to us is a serious one. Now every one believes that the English rule has done great good to India. Before the arrival of the English there were confusions, anarchy, and irregularities on all sides. The English have removed them. We are advancing through the favour of the English. If the English were to leave India now, India would be left in darkness, as she was before. This belief is entertained from the highest to the lowest of the people. Formerly we also held this belief. But we are gradually coming to believe that, instead of doing any good, the English rule is rather doing harm. We are anxious to know whether our misgivings are groundless or not. We shall be highly benefited if any of our readers can remove them. (1.) What good have the English done to India? (2.) If the English were not the rulers of India whether the good that has been done would not have been done? (3.) What would be the condition of India if the English were not its rulers? (4.) What will be our future, from the manner in which the English are now ruling India? To many these questions may appear unnecessary.—The Suravi and Pataka.

The English rule has effected considerable changes in the administration of India. Many will admit that in several instances those changes have done good. The people of India do not now wish for the end of the English rule. They only wish for reforms in the administration of the country. The English rule is not free from faults, but in spite of this the people of India do not wish for its subversion. They believe that the shortcomings it now has will be gradually removed. Those who consider the Natives as rebellious are in error. It is a matter for deep regret that even now the Government entertains this belief to a considerable extent. The Arms Act is an instance in point. However, there is in this world no man who is free from shortcoming or error, and it is no wonder that the Government had shortcomings and errors. The people of India have been in contact with the English for 150 years, but feelings of mutual love have not as yet been established between these two races. The people of India are admirers of the English rule, but they do not approve the actions of individual Englishmen. The liberality which is displayed in framing rules is not shown to us with regard to our treatment. When the Mahomedans first came to this country they showed hostility to the Natives, but as their rule was prolonged, they began to be friendly with us. But the English have been among us for a long time, and good feeling has not as yet prevailed. Rather the good feeling which existed before is being ruined. Several English gentlemen say that the Natives do not mix with them, so the gulf which now exists is attributable to the shortcomings of the said Natives. This gulf the English may easily remove if, instead of hating us, they treat us as younger brothers. It will not be removed through the efforts of the Natives. Its removal entirely depends upon the English.—The Bardwan Sanjibani.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

LIEUT.-COLONEL LOCKHART, R.A., proceeds from Meerut to England on duty.

LIEUTENANT G. C. BEADON, 29th Punjab Infantry, has been appointed to the Punjab Commission.

LIEUTENANT G. H. BRETHERTON, Corps of Guides, has been appointed to the Commissariat Department.

MAJOR S. K. MACKENZIE, R.A., proceeds from Jubbulpore to England to join E-3 R.A., into which he has been promoted.

LIEUTENANT KENNY, R.A., has been transferred to 5-1 Lancashire Division, R.A., and has received orders to proceed to Aden.

MAJOR M. J. BARLOW, R.A., has been ordered to Allahabad to join A-1, R.A., into which he has been promoted.

AN exchange of battalions has been sanctioned between Captains G. S. Douglas, 1st Battalion, and A. O. White, 2nd Battalion, Scottish Rifles.

LIEUTENANT H. E. STANTON, R.A., Intelligence Branch, proceeds to Burma to join the column about to visit the Southern Shan States.

LIEUTENANT J. M. CARPENDALE, 8th Bengal Cavalry, is reported to have passed the examination qualifying him for appointment in the Judge Advocate-General's Department.

COLONEL W. R. TRUMAN, 7th Dragoon Guards, will be placed on half pay, on completing four years' service in command of his regiment, on the 19th December, 1887.

COLONEL NEVILL, C.I.E., the Commandant of the Hyderabad Regular Troops, is establishing a camp-of-exercise at Lingumpally for the instruction of the Artillery branch of his force.

ON return from leave Captain F. T. N. Spratt and Lieut. O. M. R. Thackwell, R.E., are posted, the former to the Meerut command, Military Works, and the latter to the Sirhind and Lahore command, Military works.

THE following officers of the Corps of Royal Engineers have been placed under orders for duty in Bengal:—Lieutenants G. S. Cartwright, G. P. Lennox-Conyngham, Tomlin, G. A. Travers, W. V. Scudmore, and A. J. H. Swiney.

CAPTAIN A. W. L. BAYLY, Staff Corps, Wing Officer, 21st Bombay Infantry (Officiating Deputy Assistant Quartermaster General, Mhow Division), is appointed Deputy Assistant Quartermaster General on the establishment, vice Major Dean-Pitt, appointed Assistant Quartermaster General.

THE 32nd Madras Infantry, which is under orders for field service in Upper Burma, is expected to leave Secunderabad towards the end of January. The officers at present attached to the corps are Lieut.-Colonel Miller, in command; Lieuts. Dobbs, Hawke (adjutant), and Stevens. There are sixteen Native officers and 800 rank and file.

1st Bengal Cavalry: Major F. C. Burton to be second in command, vice Colonel T. B. M. Glascock, retired; and Captains St. J. F. Mitchell, R. F. Gartside-Tipping and C. H. Hayes, squadron commanders, to move up in grade succession.

2nd Punjab Cavalry: Lieutenant Jones, attached, to be permanent squadron officer.

32nd Pioneers: Captain H. R. W. Lumsden, lately employed in the Punjab Police, to officiate as wing commander.

38th Bengal Infantry: Captain G. H. Watson, lately employed in the Assam Commission, to officiate as wing commander.

THE following officers have been appointed probationers for the Staff Corps:—

Lieutenant S. M. Tighe, East Yorkshire Regiment, and Lieutenant R. C. Lye, Hampshire Regiment, to the 5th Bengal Infantry.

Lieutenants P. S. M. Burlton and W. B. James, Derbyshire Regiment, to the 9th and 38th Bengal Infantry, respectively.

COLONEL LE MESSURIER, R.E., has made a journey to Bokhara. He travelled as far as Charjui, on the Oxus, on the Trans-Caspian Railway, riding and driving the remainder of the distance. The transit from the Caspian to Charjui takes fifty-three hours. A railway station at Bokhara is being constructed some miles south of the city, and there also will be placed the Russian cantonments. Colonel Le Messurier walked about the Bokhara bazaars and town unmolested.

THERE will be no camp of exercise at the beginning of the new year under the direct superintendence of the Duke of Connaught. There will be four brigades at Wanowrie, Gorepuri, New Jhansi, and Kirkee, and a brigade of cavalry at Jerrowda, composed partly of the Hyderabad contingent, and partly of the Poona Horse—in all five camps, which will be distributed over the invading and defending forces.

SERVICE with the military police in Upper Burma does not appear to be popular with the officers, several having resigned. Captain P. C. Huggins, commanding a Police Battalion, who is the last to revert to regimental duty, has been directed to join the 21st Madras Infantry. Surgeon-Major J. McDermott has been ordered to Yewan to assume medical charge of the 15th Madras Infantry; Surgeon P. Shina has been ordered from Kawlin to Htigaing to take medical charge of the Wing, 5th Bengal Light Infantry; Surgeon Conroy proceeds with the section of his Field Hospital to Mandalay; Surgeon R. S. Henderson, from Myingyan, has been posted to the Station Hospital, Mandalay, for duty; Surgeon D. Warliker has been posted to the General Hospital for Native troops, Mandalay; and Brigade Surgeon G. D. Riddell has been appointed to the medical charge of the Native General Hospital, Mandalay.

As mention has often been made in the Pioneer of the appalling losses in horses of the 7th Bengal Cavalry, 1st Bombay Lancers, and the 3rd Hyderabad Contingent serving in Burma, and of the 1st Madras Lancers, it may be interesting to some to know that this regiment has fared as badly as the other three regiments. It lost from Kumoi and other diseases, peculiar to Burma, a total of 250 horses, including officers' charges. This in round numbers means a total of over a lakh of rupees not including conveyance to Burma. It may be safely assumed that at the present rate of casualties, viz., one per diem, at the close of the present cold weather operations the regiment will have lost 100 more horses, or in about eighteen months' service in Burma a total loss of 350 horses—in other words, a whole regiment of Madras Cavalry?

DAILY LIFE AND WORK IN INDIA.—SKETCHES OF INDIAN LIFE*

Daily life in India is so different from the routine of existence in this country that Mr. Wilkins has done well to explain in clear, simple terms the ways and doings of our brethren in the East. There is, of course, much to say, but it is said well, and the reader will pick up many a piece of information which is at once novel and instructive. A glance at a few points of interest will serve to show the nature of Mr. Wilkins' labours. All the world knows that Calcutta is on the Hugli, but all the world does not know that the sand-banks in that river are so constantly shifting that a passage which is safe to-day is often impassable to-morrow. It is curious also to read that large and strong ships are often tied together without a single nail; that it is not etiquette for a man to be seen speaking to his wife by day, that one banyan tree at the City of Palaces is sufficiently large to give shade and protection to upwards of 10,000 persons; that English ladies, like plants which are kept in the dark, lose their colour owing to their constant residence in rooms from which light is excluded by shutters, &c., and designed to keep the room cool and inhabitable.

But even more astonishing is it to learn that in Calcutta Mr. Wilkins never saw more than three or four snakes while in the country districts, their presence is a more or less rare event, unless ruins or some quiet out-of-the-way place be visited. Tigers, too, are so seldom met with that many scores of Anglo-Indians quit India without ever having met one of these terrible creatures. Of course there are jungles, desolate and waste where Mr. Stripes is pretty certain to be tracked, but these spots are not in the way of ordinary travellers, and special efforts are needed to find oneself in the midst of the most attractive sport known to the traveller.

Another peculiarity anent the Hindus is their wonderful capacity for cooking. Give them a few sticks for a fire; a pit of any sort, description or size, and in due course you will have a dinner fit for a prince—how and when and where prepared is almost incredible! If you ask a Hindu how many children he has he will omit to reckon the girls, and take stock only of the sons; so that it is quite common for a man to tell you calmly that the boy before you is his only child, while around him are playing six or eight daughters of Eve—sisters of the solitary offspring.

Mr. Wilkins speaks with astonishment as to the ignorance displayed in regard to the word "zenana," so familiar a sound in connection with the fashionable "zenana missions"; the term which some people fancy indicates a place, others a people, according to our author, "is nothing of the kind—zenana simply means 'a woman.'" Strange that the teacher needs himself to be taught; what he should have written is "womanly," the word being an adjective derived from "zan," a woman. By custom of long years it has come to mean "women's apartments."

One syllable with reference to missionary work. People often wonder that converts are not more numerous. Do such parties ever reflect that when a Hindu embraces Christianity he is compelled to leave home, parents, riches, "everything, in fact, that is dear to him in this world? As Hindus they would share the accommodation of the family home, as Christians they must leave it. As Hindus they would be loved and cared for by the members of the family, as Christians they are outcasts. As Hindus they would find friends to help them on in life, as Christians they find a strong combination against them."

Mr. Das's work, though similar in scope, deals with the subject in an entirely different aspect; his volume introduces the reader not to society at large, but to the individual items of which it is composed. He portrays the ascetic as he sits "wrapt in meditation or looking listlessly towards the sky," his locks matted, his face smeared with ashes, his forehead streaked with yellow paint, a tiger-skin hanging from his shoulders, beads, tridents, all combining to give that aspect of piety which marks the "jogee" who is "united to God." Then there is the astrologer with shaven head, save as regards a small tuft on the back of the skull — a most important personage, who is consulted at every turn, and whose divinations—be they right or be they wrong—are regarded as the oracles of God by the many who ask his advice and seek his assistance in the daily difficulties of everyday life.

Scarcely less important is the village barber, who not only shaves you, takes the grey hairs out of your head, eyebrows, and moustache, trimming your nails, and clearing your ears, but acts the part of the village surgeon, bleeding, cupping, and otherwise taking the place of the ordinary surgeon. The barber is also a professional match maker, acting as a go-between in "making arrangements for marriage, seeking out eligible brides or bridegrooms." He is, further, an active participator in all ceremonial rites, whether it be a wedding, a birth, or a funeral.

The bard in the East occupies a distinguished position. "Like the troubadours and minstrels of Europe during the middle ages, they are principally occupied in chanting their own verses or legends from the mythology of India; and it is from them that the Princes learn the history and genealogy of their races." Melodious in voice, graceful in action, these bards are attractive and fascinating. Sometimes they attain very high rank, but for the most part they are humble in position, albeit sacred in character. "The Hindoo bards," says Mr. Das, "now sing hymns of peace, of praise, and of glory in peaceful palaces and quiet cottages, instead of, as in former times, chanting songs of war, of bravery, and of heroism on the eve of battle, inciting people to glorious actions, and clothing them, when successfully performed, with renown and immortality."

Mr. Das touches upon these and many other characters with a facile pen. He tells enough to interest, and leaves on the mind of the reader a clear idea of the personages to be seen at every turn in the sunny plains of "India's coral shores;" and read in juxtaposition with Mr. Wilkins' work there can be no excuse in future for ignorance as regards England's Eastern diadem.

Mr. Alger is evidently intimately acquainted with Paris. There is not a subject upon which he does not discourse with every indication of personal knowledge and individual experience. Men, manners, customs, museums, institutions, architecture, politics, each and all pass under review in a way which leaves nothing to be desired. His information is precise and evidently accurate; he tells enough to please, and avoids the pitfall of weariness.

The French are a remarkable and peculiar people. Foreigners live amongst them, die in their midst, and pass to their graves as ignorant of the inner life of the nation as the day on which they quitted the shores of "perfidious Albion." Gallic idiosyncracies are striking. As a people they are particularly fond of gesticulating; they kiss one another in the street, but they never whistle; they accommodate themselves to climate in a way unknown to their neighbours across the Channel. Fancy an English bricklayer working with an umbrella over his head! Yet this is a daily occurrence in the streets of Paris. They have no national games beyond the humble "leap-frog," or the childish "hopscotch." "Marbles" are rare, "kites" almost unknown; but this is, in part, due to the circumstance that play is generally limited to half-an-hour at a time, a period utterly inadequate for any amusement of importance. "I have no time for play," dolefully complained a boy of eleven summers, and this is the key-note to many a failing in the French character.

Frenchmen retire from business early in life. Satisfied, as a rule, with a small competency, they do not plod on till too old for work; and when they are "out of harness" they often are at a loss for amusement, for, as a race, they are not great readers. Marriages, as everyone knows, are only possible with the consent of the parents; and home, in the sense it is interpreted in this country, is quite unknown; indeed, the language does not contain a term to express that glorious institution. A word en passant as to the practice of sending English lads to French schools. Mr. Alger most thoroughly condemns this custom, which he says produces no good and much harm; it unsettles the mind, it unhinges the principles of most youths who are not destined to improve their education, as is hoped, but rather to acquire a little smattering of the language, and a liberal allowance of either scepticism or Catholicism.

The descriptions of prominent individuals in the French Republic will be read with interest, especially as regard M. Grévy and his worthy son-in-law, M. Wilson; and perhaps astonishment at recent revelations will be modified on learning the style and sort of men which come to the front in the gayest city of the gayest people in the world. There seems a blight upon the land; its policy, its people, its politics all seem in a vortex of unrest; and yet, withal, we are taught to believe that religion is a sign of weakness, and piety a feeble amusement for more than feeble minds. Strange, then, that a nation which has cast its faith to the winds of Heaven should float on the ocean of Time, drifting hither and thither as each human impulse gains or loses force in the counsels of the Empire. Godless, the country is its own god; irreverent, it does not command reverence; impious, it is filled with impiety. If this be the result of Scepticism let us be thankful that as yet old England has not been drawn into the vortex of moral ruin and physical deterioration. She can still place on her banner the good time-honoured motto, "For God, Queen, and Country."

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN TRADE AND SHIPPING CODE.†

In these days commerce is conducted to an enormous extent by means of the electric telegraph. A single word flashes across the ocean, and thousands of pounds' worth of goods change hands as a result. It is evident that in such circumstances a codified system of phrases and technical terms is not only advisable, but absolutely necessary. Mr. Meyer's work, therefore, in this direction is that of a national requirement; it is simple, complete, and embraces every conceivable form of phraseology. As a means of saving thousands upon thousands of pounds through the medium of combining under one group a mass of words, which otherwise would involve each a separate payment, the code may well be left to plead its own cause; but Mr. Meyer has gone further than this, and has conceived the happy idea of publishing a precisely similar code in the leading European languages, so that firms in England will thereby be enabled to correspond by telegraph on matters of business without knowing the dialect of the clients with whom they are in communication. This may, and at times doubtless would, save the cost of a special clerk conversant with the particular tongue in which the telegram is drafted. One, and only one, drawback merits attention. If all merchants use one and the same code it is not apparent how a merchant can telegraph in cypher; or, rather, if he makes his own cypher, how he could avail himself of Mr. Meyer's work, which is the common property of any and every purchaser. Of course, in many instances, this could be done by the use of a private code when blanks are left in the public code—thus, "concrete creep" would convey no meaning, even to Mr. Meyer himself. He would, it is true, refer to his volume and find under the head "concrete" —"we have the refusal for twenty-four hours of," but the meaning of "creep" being a secret the phrase would be unintelligible; but this procedure could not always be found possible. Could not the talented and experienced author derive an escape from this dilemma?

RECEIPTS FOR PUDDINGS AND SWEETS.*

The value of a bock of this description consists mainly, if not entirely, in the practicability of the receipts. Nothing is more common than to find directions, which, when judged by this standard of everyday life, utterly and entirely fail. We do not pretend, of course, to have tried all the 365 receipts, alike plain, and simple, and recherché, which Miss Jones has compressed into the small compass of a shilling manual, but we have made inquiries with a result that we are led to understand that in every individual case the directions are the outcome of personal experience. This circumstance in itself stamps the volume as trustworthy, and the further fact that the sale, hitherto by thousands rather than hundreds, speaks with more eloquence than the most complimentary review. Still it is a duty to express an honest opinion that, whether the fare be a plain everyday sweet, or the richer confectionery for a party, there are dishes to tempt the most capricious of tastes and the most dainty of palates.

THE LONDON SCOTTISH BRIGADE MARCH†

This march is lively and effective. Without any pretence at high art it is attractive and popular, and, withal, so easy that the merest beginner need not despair of breaking down. Mr. Leopold has an ear for rhythm, and his composition should be received with public favour.

Indian Engineering says that the difficulty of floating the Nilgiri railway scheme has been removed by the perseverance of Mr. R. Woolley. The project could not be thrown upon the London market owing to the company being domiciled in India. Mr. Woolley, however, proceeded to England recently, and argued the matter with the Secretary of State and his legal advisers, with the result that the difficulties have been waived, and the scheme will now be launched in London.

THE Straits Times says that the editor of the Madras Mail is the "first British journalist who has had the distinction of being knighted." This is not quite correct. The editor of that journal may be the first journalist who has received the honour direct from Her Majesty's hands, but Mr. W. C. Leng, the editor of the Sheffield Daily Telegraph, was gazetted a knight on the 21st June last, nine days before the Madras editor was commanded to appear at Windsor.

Miscellaneous.

MAHOMEDANS IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE.—The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, in his Resolution on the report on the Chittagong Division for the year 1886-87, observes with satisfaction that the orders of the Government with regard to the number of Mahomedans employed in Government service have received proper attention, and he is also glad to learn that an increased determination on the part of the Mahomedans not to linger behind their contemporaries in the matter of education has been generally observed throughout the division. With regard to the employment of Mahomedans in Orissa, the Commissioner of that Division is of opinion that in the inferior service the number of Mahomedans is sufficient, but that more Mahomedans should be appointed on the occurrence of vacancies in the superior service when qualified men are available. It appears probable that the required number of educated Mahomedans in Orissa will soon be found, for the percentage of Mussulmans at school as compared with Hindus is greater than the percentage of population, and already the Mahomedans are able to hold their own with the Hindus in the departmental examinations. If the Mahomedans can do this in a backward province like Orissa, it should encourage their co-religionists to renewed efforts elsewhere.

THE Inspector-General of Police, Madras, having solicited orders of Government as to the manner in which the re-grading of Superintendents and Assistant Superintendents of Police, consequent on the reorganisation of the Police establishment, should be given effect to, Government have approved of the recommendation made by him, that all Superintendents and Assistant Superintendents should now be placed in the new grades according to seniority, all permanent incumbents of the old grade appointments continue to draw the pay of such appointments until promoted to higher ones. Acting Assistant Superintendents whose allowances are effected from August 10, 1887, the date of the Government of India's letter on the subject of the reorganization, are to be treated alike, and are from that date to draw acting allowances calculated on the pay of the lowest of the grades, in accordance with Section 17, Pay and Acting Allowance Code. The appointments of Superintendent and Assistant Superintendent of Police are to continue to be treated as appointments open to commissioned military officers, and acting uncovenanted officers are to be allowed the benefit of acting allowances calculated under Sections 16 and 17 of the Pay and Acting Allowance Code. The revised scale provides for a staff of 23 Superintendents, viz., two 1st grade, on Rs. 1,000 each; five 2nd grade, on Rs. 800 each; seven 3rd grade, on Rs. 700 each; and nine 4th grade, on Rs. 600 each; and twenty-one Assistant Superintendents, viz., six 1st grade, on Rs. 500 each; eight 2nd grade, on Rs. 400 each; and seven 3rd grade, on Rs. 350 each.

A GALLANT DEED.—The 1st Battalion of the King's Own (Yorkshire Light Infantry) under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel C. K. Chatfield, arrived at Mandalay from the Upper Burma frontier on the 31st October, in the Indian Marine steamer Sir William Peel, en route to England. A short time after their arrival a lance corporal of the battalion, named Upton, fell overboard; the colonel who was standing with his officers on deck at the time, seeing the man fall over, ran to the bridge and jumped overboard in his uniform after him. Upton, who was unable to swim, rose only once to the surface, and sank just before the colonel could reach him; he was never seen again. The Irrawaddy runs with dangerous force past Mandalay, and has proved fatal to many of our gallant soldiers. Colonel Chatfield's right hand was partly disabled and bandaged at the time he jumped overboard. He swam some distance down the river in hopes of the unfortunate corporal coming to the surface again, but no trace of him was seen, though hundreds of eager eyes were watching from the decks of the steamer. Two men of a company of the battalion which had disembarked, Privates Mills and Staton, both fine swimmers, seeing the excitement on board and some one in the water, pluckily went into the stream and swam towards the steamer, and afterwards followed the colonel down the river. All three succeeded afterwards in reaching the shore without much difficulty. On the 2nd November Major-General Sir George White, K.C.B., V.C., commanding the Upper Burma Field Force, accompanied by the whole of the head-quarter staff, inspected this fine battalion, which had disembarked for the occasion, and at the conclusion of the parade Sir George White referred to the above occurrence in a stirring address to the regiment. He said that, while sympathising with them deeply on the sad fate of their comrade, he could not but congratulate them on having at their head an officer who had shown such gallantry, and who had not hesitated to risk his own life in the hope of saving one of his own men with desperate odds against him. He felt sure the regiment would not misunderstand him when he said he felt thankful the attempt had failed, as there could be little doubt that, had their colonel succeeded in reaching the drowning man in that dangerous current, he must have perished with him, and two lives would have been lost instead of one.

CHRISTMAS IN ENGLAND AND IN INDIA.

IF this be the season consecrated to charity as understood in its noblest sense, as enunciated by St. Paul, it is also in England the season consecrated to cant. However unsympathetic, narrow-minded, or selfish we may have been throughout the other days of the year, the advent of Christmas is supposed to work a revolution in our natures, and to make us loving, genial, and generous towards our fellow-men and women. Nobody hates his neighbour or loves his neighbour's wife on Christmas Day. Englishmen are on that day one happy family, bent on exercising all the domestic virtues and scattering good-will around. Does not the Daily Telegraph assure us yearly that this is the case, and praise of Christmas coming from such a source is praise indeed? Hear what it says of the season this year: "Christmas as the home-bringer, Christmas as the peace-maker, Christmas as that social and personal influence which upholds the family and consecrates its principle and its purport is a very mighty and prevailing force among us, showing no signs at all of any decreasing sovereignty over the hearts and minds of classes or masses. Whether he comes white-robed in snow and jewelled with frost diamonds, or wears at this season his mild garb of green—whether his old grey beard glistens with icicles, or shines fitfully with drops of pattering rain—he comes goodly, glad, and welcome—the genius of kindly thoughts, of gentle feelings, of homely love, and simple humanities."

All this is very fine, and as comforting to the soul as "that blessed word Mesopotamia." The writer, however, allows that "peace on earth" has not yet spread so widely as was promised, and that "good-will" on a large scale has still to show itself amongst the nations; and he might have added that want and poverty are more rampant than ever in our midst—that the demon of Discontent is sowing the seeds of strife between labour and capital—and that Lazarus, instead of sitting humbly at Dives' gate is casting hungry and wolfish eyes at his possessions. There are other influences at work in England at this Christmas-tide besides the genial ones so warmly hailed from Peterborough-court.

But let us not be misunderstood. The coldest of cynics will not deny that Christmas in England, and especially in this great city of London, brings with it much to gladden many hearts. The rich will give bountifully to many charities; many poor and hungry ones, old and young, will be fed; and a momentary ray of sunshine may be thrown upon some humble homes which throughout all the rest of the year stand in the shadow almost of despair. It is good that even one bright hour should come than none, but the sad thought is that with the passing away of that bright hour the gloom, the poverty, and the despair return. It may be that there is no remedy for this until that by-and-bye of which the poet sings, when what is amiss in this old world of ours shall be unriddled and some of the social problems which puzzle humanity now be solved. But it is a pity that even the little good which is undoubtedly done at this season cannot be done without much clamour and cant. The poor whom we have always with us might as well be relieved on other days of the year also, and friends and relations need hardly reserve one special day out of the three hundred and sixty-five to attest the warmth of their feelings and affection by burdening the Post-office with Christmas cards.

In India, however, Christmas holds more of its olden influence on Englishmen than it does, perhaps, here. It is the "home bringer" to the Anglo-Indian there, that is to say if the word home be not yet a mocking memory to him. But in too many cases the bread-winner, be he Civilian or Soldier, will be toiling away in the plains alone—his household gods being far away in England. The little ones have gone home to gain that mental and moral touch which only English air can give—the mother will possibly be with them—and so Christmas to the husband and father in India comes with something like a sorrow, for it recalls the poignancy of the separation, although the necessity of it is allowed. It may be a gentle grief "resembling sorrow only as the mist resembles rain," but not the less a grief. Only those who have had that bitter experience of India can understand that grief—the secret grief such as Jean Paul Richter tells us a friend must not see, because he cannot take it away, and which sometimes rises in the midst of blessedness. But we do not mean by this that the Anglo-Indian will not enjoy his Christmas in spite of this shadow and the want of all the surroundings which go to make up Christmas at home. He will make merry, for he has a brave heart, which nerves him to his work, and keeps hope buoyant within him—hope of the happy home-meeting yet to come. And this hope brightens his Christmas Day in exile, and gives a gladness to the toast which will be drank that night in every bungalow and station mess in India—to "Absent Friends."

MISS MARY SAMUEL, a Jewess, of Poona, has passed the B.A. Examination. This is the first instance of a Jewish young lady reaching the B.A. standard in India.

SURGEON C. J. ADDISON'S efforts at inaugurating an ambulance system in India will not be confined to Quetta, where he has done good work. He has been transferred to Umballa till the spring, when he goes to Jutogh; and will there undertake an Ambulance Class on the same system as his class at Quetta. The movement has the sympathy of the Countess of Dufferin and Lady Roberts.

THE principal legislative measure before the Bengal Council this Session will be the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Bill, and nothing important beyond this is likely to be brought forward, except a somewhat cognate measure to give the local Government power to exclude from municipal limits lands and buildings in the occupation of Government. This question has arisen in connection with the Ishapore Gunpowder Factory, the Fulta Magazine, and the Goompahar Reserved Forest at Darjeeling. Taking it all round, the Council of the Lower Provinces has probably seldom opened with so little business in prospect.

The Pioneer says:—"That enfant terrible, Dr. Leitner, has apparently been posing at the India Office as a martyr, and to some purpose. The Secretary of State is believed to have written to India requesting that the man may receive compensation for his dismissal from the Educational Service of the Punjab—as it practically was—or be reinstated. The case has been referred to the Supreme Government, of which, fortunately, Sir Charles Aitchison, who knows all about it, is a member. Cost what the alternative might, Dr. Leitner's return to the Punjab is impossible."

THE COMPETITION OF CHINESE WITH INDIAN OPIUM.

The statement that the condition of the opium revenue is causing some anxiety to the Government of India is not surprising. The competition of the Native drug in China has been growing keener every year, and now that the taxation on the Indian article has been advanced, while the Native article pays little or no taxation, it would be strange if the consumption of the latter did not increase, and that of the former diminish. It is true there is a vast difference between the two in point of quality, and by the wealthy Indian opium will probably always be preferred; but to the great majority of smokers the price is an important question. The opium smoker of small means will, like the tobacco smoker, use the cheaper and ranker article. Moreover, the quality of the Native opium is being gradually improved, and it will consequently commend itself to a constantly increasing number of smokers. If kept for some considerable time it is said it becomes nearly equal to Indian. Having the advantage in point of prime cost, and the further advantage of being almost exempt from duty, while Indian opium pays a duty, amounting to nearly twenty-five per cent. of its value, it stands to reason that it must in course of time supplant the latter if this state of things is allowed to continue. But the question of revenue is of as much importance to the Chinese Government as to the Government of India, or even more so. Can she afford to sacrifice her revenue for the sake of enabling Native opium to drive out the foreign drug? It is said that for the last half-year the opium duty collected by Foreign Customs amounts only to some Tls. 1,600,000 or Tls. 1,700,000, instead of the Tls. 4,000,000 estimated, whereas if Native opium were taxed to the same extent as Indian the yearly revenue would be over Tls. 20,000,000. Sir Robert Hart, it is stated, has submitted the matter to the Tsung li-Yamen and the Board of Revenue, but their decision is not yet known. On a previous occasion a similar representation was not acted upon. It may be that the Chinese Government are really determined on killing trade in foreign opium by favouring the competition of the Native drug, and that the latter will not be taxed until the trade in Indian opium is dead. This, we say, may possibly be the intention, but in view of the state of of the Imperial treasury, it is extremely improbable that it will be carried out. What is more probable is that a tax will very shortly be put on Native opium which will do away with the greater part of the advantage it at present enjoys over the imported drug. There are few articles of produce that escape taxation in China, and opium will not long enjoy its present immunity. Theoretically, its cultivation in the Middle Kingdom is forbidden, and the consideration that if it were taxed the prohibition would be actually, as it already has been virtually, annulled, may be the reason for the disclination hitherto evinced to impose such taxation. But as against this may be set the fact, of which the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade would do well to take note, that China has now, by the recently-concluded Convention with France, herself become an opium-exporting country, and has agreed to a fixed export duty to be charged on the drug when passing from Yunnan into Tonquin. It is not probable, therefore, that any merely sentimental reason will long deter the Chinese Government from taxing Native opium. But even if Native opium be placed on the same footing as Indian opium as regards taxation it will always have the advantage as regards first cost, and as the quality will in all probability go on improving the Indian Government will have to recognise the fact that its revenue from the sale of opium to China will gradually diminish; the question is simply one of the rate at which the diminution will go on. If Chinese opium continues to enjoy the advantages of Protection the diminution of the Indian revenue will be rapid; if it is taxed on equal terms the process will go on more slowly; but that there will be diminution in either case there can be no reasonable doubt. India has adopted the cultivation of tea, formerly a monopoly of China, and is now taking an equal place in the world's market for this commodity; is it any more improbable that China should in time equal or even surpass India in the production of opium? In quantity she probably already does so, and in quality she may in time prove herself equal to India. The scientific principles of cultivation followed in the latter country are now being carefully adopted in Tonquin, and from there the knowledge will doubtless spread to Yunnan and on through Szechuen and the other opium-producing provinces, and it is obvious that if China can supply herself with opium of satisfactory quality she will not require to buy it from India. The anxiety of the Indian Government is therefore not unfounded. But "the high rate at which the internal transits duty was commuted in the Convention of August, 1885," must not be blamed as the sole cause of the changed conditions of the opium market, for the competition of the Chinese drug had been growing more severely felt than for years previously.—Hong Kong Daily Press.

IT is believed that the Mhow and Northern Divisions will be converted into districts; that the Brigade Command of Nusseerabad will be abolished; and that the Bombay District will become a Major-General's command.

EXPLORATIONS IN BRITISH NORTH BORNEO.

A Paper was read before the Royal Geographical Society on the 12th inst., by Mr. D. D. Daly, Assistant-Resident in charge of Province Dent, North Borneo, on the above subject. In the course of his remarks Mr. Daly said :—

On Aug. 27, 1884, I left Sandakan, the capital of British North Borneo in the steamlaunch Sabine. The Kinabatangan, ascended this, the largest navigable river in the territory, as far as the draught of the vessel permitted, and thence proceeded in boats. The banks were lined on either side by mangroves and nipa palms, and the first place of importance reached was Malapi. This is the depôt for the edible birds' nests that are brought from the Mammoth Gomanton Caves, which are situated about twelve miles to the northward. The nests that are collected are valued at $25,000 per annum, and the North Borneo Government had let the caves in 1884 at a yearly rental of $9,000. The height of one of the vaults in these limestone caves has been estimated at 900 feet, upwards of twice the height of St. Paul's, London, and some idea may be formed of the swarms of swallows (Callocalia) when it is said that a steady column of these birds has been timed by watch to fly for three-quarters of an hour from one of the apertures. All these birds' nests are sent to China, where they are prized as a luxury in the well-known Chinese birds'-nest soup.

The settlements between Malapi and the Lokan river are the most flourishing, and are inhabited by Sulus, Buloodupies, and Tambanuahs on the river Kinabatangan. There are no villages such as are understood in other countries ; the names comprise certain tracts of country, frequently a streamlet or an important bend of the river, and the houses are widely scattered, each house having its own padi fields, fruit plantations, and a patch of jungle scrub land. At many places on either bank were to be seen dense clumps of fruit trees that were allowed to run wild when the small-pox decimated or drove the people away. These trees comprised langsat, durians, two kinds of rambutans, two kinds of pulasans, two kinds of the Chinese lichee, limes, oranges, and others ; many of them were richly laden with a profusion of fruit, which travellers were free to gather, and with which the boatmen loaded up my boats.

At a place called Tagai we came upon a wild tribe of Tungaras, who all jumped ashore and ran away from us, leaving five long boats in the river. We put some rice and fruit in their boats to show them that we were friendly. The next place was Baka, where there were some more clearings belonging to the Tambanuah tribe. Here we came upon a rapid where the force of the current was very great.

At Imbok, where Pangeran Besar Asin is the ruling chief, a curious mausoleum was visited on the bank of the river. It is built of solid bilian wood, the posts and beams are prettily ornamented and fluted, the ends being carved into grotesque heads of animals. These bilian posts are perfectly sound, although I was assured that they must have been over 100 years in the ground, and are proof against the inroads of the white ants There are thirty or forty bodies in one mausoleum, which is encircled with fruit trees, the clusters of langsat and rambutan overhanging in graceful profusion.

All along the banks we found rich soil, the secondary sandstone formation still prevailing. At Karangan the tribe of Romanows were first met—Headman, Tamat. There are about 500 Romanows scattered about this district ; they are very wild, and live in wretched hovels. They plant padi, move from place to place on the rivers every second year, making a fresh clearing each time, and therefore destroying much valuable jungle forest. Their habits are gregarious, and they will not settle down and make permanent homes.

About a mile higher up than Penungah the Kinabatangan branches into two rivers, viz., the Melian and the Mungcago. The Melian is the proper Kinabatangan, but the latter name is dropped. All around them are high ranges, varying from 2,000 feet to 6,000 feet, and densely covered with jungle. The pebbles in the streams contained granite, sandstone, silicates, quartz, micallous schist, and large quantities of iron pyrites embedded in blue claystones and rolled pieces of coal. The prevailing rock is sandstone ; the granite has evidently been washed down from the slopes of Kinabalu. Near the Mungcago river we were taken to a mineral spring ; the water tasted salt, probably one of the salt oxides of iron, and all around were tracks of wild cattle and of deer that came to lick the salt. The people drink the water as medicine for rheumatism. The head-hunting tribes on the Mungcago river are still carrying on their blood-feuds.

The Obang-Obang mountain runs north and south, and is half a mile in length. There are seven entrances to the vaults from the top of the range, all situated close to each other. Five of these vaults do not contain any birds' nests, there being no swallows, only bats dwelling there. The only chamber that can be entered by any one who is not an adept at climbing on rattans to the roof of the vaults is only 50 feet high, and contains both bats' and swallows' nests. The bats' nests are similar in form to the swallows', but are made of moss only, which these mammalia pick off the limestone boulders outside. There were some handsome stalactites that were uninjured, and some stalagmites were forming on the floor of the chamber. On my return to the village of Gamud I made arrangements with the Tungara chiefs that they should pay the North Borneo Government one-third of the birds' nests that were collected each season as their tribute for protection of life and property afforded by the establishment of a police-station at Penungah. To this proposal they willingly agreed. When I first arrived here the women and children ran away and hid themselves in the back rooms of the house, and the men looked nervously suspicious. None of them had seen a white man before, and they examined my arms and chest, and were very merry at the idea of my skin being white, which they seemed to think an absurd freak of nature. The men only wear the loin-cloth ; the women have but one garment, viz., a short petticoat, which is kept up around the waist by coils of brass wire, the young girls have, as an addition, coils of brass wire from the ankle half-way up to the knee. The cloth is woven from the thread made from the cotton trees "kapok," that grow luxuriantly around their houses, and the women use the same kind of spindle for making thread as are common among the Dusuns of the west coast, holding the cotton in the left hand and occasionally giving a twist to the spindle with the right hand. Their sleeping-hours are peculiar. No bedding is used, but they sleep on mats until about midnight, when they wake up shivering with the cold of these inland mountains. A fire is then lighted on a large oval-shaped hearth that is made of clay in the centre of each house, and all the inmates, young and old, sit round the fire until dawn in a crouching attitude, telling long-winded stories, sometimes nodding, and sometimes leaning against his or her neighbour with head resting on the knees. Their chants at night-time are doleful and monotonous in tone.

The other exploring expedition is located on the west coast. The people in these lowlands are mostly of the Besayah tribe, intermixed with Brunei, Malays, and Dusuns. The principal settlements passed were Gadong, Lupak, Limbawang, Berkalow, and Morak, where the sago cultivators are most numerous. Herds of buffalo and cattle roam along the banks, where the padi-fields have been allowed to run fallow, threw up luxuriant grasses. The houses and gardens denote a prosperous state of existence, the latter containing all the usual fruits and vegetables that are common to Singapore.

Our climb over the range 3,200ft. high in the gap from the river Rayoh and down to the Pagalan river took ten hours, and the next day the party woke up very stiff. The news of a white man's arrival soon spread about among the populous settlements of the Pagalan and Padas rivers, and the Muruts began to crowd into the audience-chamber in such numbers that the air was redolent of the unpleasant odour of half-naked savages. Each chief brought a fowl or a few pounds of rice or a basket of Indian corn as a token of friendship, which I reciprocated with presents of red and blue drill-cloth, beads, and brass wire. Some brought in sugar-canes ten feet long and of great thickness, bundles of bananas, eggs, fruit, and vegetables, for which they received an equivalent in return. These presents were frequently offered by them with an ulterior motive, to gain my goodwill in some long-standing inter-tribal feud, and as I had come with the avowed object of stopping their head-hunting forays, I always returned a quid pro quo for their presents. The salt brought by us from the coast was a most valued commodity, as there was none in their mountain ranges, but medicines such as quinine, vaseline, medical oils, Cockle's pills and plasters, proved to be wonderful talismen in gaining the goodwill of the Muruts. They are savages pur et simple, and came in their war-paint. The orderly stood at the foot of the stairs, and all spears, swords, blow-pipes, and poisoned arrows were taken by him, deposited in a heap under the house, and returned to the owners when they took their departure.

The people have nearly all they want in the way of food excepting salt. These large rivers yield them freshwater fish every day. The forests are full of deer, which multiply, as there are no tigers, as in India and in Malay Peninsula, to kill them, and some one of the large household brings in a deer or two every day to one house. The flesh is dried and smoked, and carried about in baskets as provisions on a journey. They grow their own tobacco, which is dried green, and is smoked by both men and women in huge cigarettes, the covering of which is made of banana leaves. On the sea coast the cigarette wrappers are made from the young shoots of the Nipa palm. All the tropical fruits are plentiful during the season, and when the rice harvest has been gathered in the Muruts brew a strong spirit called "burack" from fermented rice which is not boiled. This is the same spirit which intoxicates the Dusuns of the west coast, but there is this difference between the Muruts and Dusuns : the Murut drunken revelry is confined to the men only ; but with the Dusuns I have seen men, women, and children all rolling about, shouting and laughing in their mad orgies.

The object of this journey in opening up the interior for trade was in some measure accomplished, and I returned to the sea-coast, crossing the range again at an altitude of 3,200 feet. Many of these untutored savages have since come to Mempakol, the principal sea-port of Province Dent ; but much still remains to be accomplished in drawing to the sea-coast the rich products of the vast interior.

A short discussion ensued, in which Sir Rutherford Alcock and Mr. Treacher, late Governor of North Borneo, took part, and with a vote of thanks to Mr. Daly the meeting terminated.

Vice-Admiral Sir Nowell Salmon, V.C., K.C.B., the newly-appointed Commander-in-Chief of the China Station, served as lieutenant in the James Watt, during the Russian War, in the Baltic, 1854-55 (Baltic medal) ; also in the Shannon Naval Brigade in India ; was present at the relief of Lucknow (promoted) ; also in action at Kudjwa, Nov. 1, 1857 (Indian medal, Lucknow clasp). For conspicuous gallantry at Lucknow, Nov. 16, 1857, in climbing up a tree, touching the angle of the Shah Nujjiff to reply to the fire of the enemy, for which most dangerous service the late Captain Peel, K.C.B., had called for volunteers, he was promoted to Commander and awarded the Victoria Cross. He was nominated C.B. May 29, 1875 ; was aide-de-camp to the Queen, Dec. 12, 1875, to Aug. 2, 1879 ; and Commander-in-Chief, Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa Station, March, 1882-85. He was a member of the Royal Commission to inquire into the system under which patterns for warlike stores are adopted and the stores obtained and passed into Her Majesty's Service, 1887, and was created K.C.B. (additional member) June 21, 1887, on the occasion of the celebration of the completion of the fiftieth year of Her Majesty's reign. Vice-Admiral Salmon has selected Captain W. H. May to be his Flag Captain ; Lieut. John F. Lea, as Flag Lieutenant, and Reginald B. Rigby, paymaster, as Secretary.

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGIATE SCHOOL.

THE course of instruction is designed to PREPARE BOYS (Sons of Gentlemen, from 7 years of age) to occupy the positions of Land Owners and Occupiers, Land Agents, Surveyors, intending Colonists, &c. The education secured at this institution is of a very superior character, the whole object of the School being to impart a thoroughly practical and scientific knowledge of all agricultural subjects; a thorough moral, intellectual, and physical training, it pledges itself to send forth its pupils practically religious and sound scholars. The school is most pleasantly situated in a healthy locality. The greatest possible care is bestowed upon the health and domestic comfort of the pupils. The diet is excellent and unlimited. The school is very strongly recommended. References throughout Great Britain.—Address for prospectus the PRINCIPAL, Maypole Road, East Grinstead, Sussex.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

HERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to set. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

SYSTEMS OF

HEATING, COOLING, VENTILATING, AND ELECTRIC LIGHTING

TESTIMONIALS.

From R. NORMAN SHAW, Architect to the Royal Academy:—

29, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C.,
February 19 1884.

The "Æolus" Waterspray Company have fixed two Air Extractors and one Air Warmer in the Life School of the Royal Academy of Arts with, we all think, the happiest results. Our troubles with that school have always been very great, as owing to the amount of gas consumed, and the necessity of keeping the school well heated on account of the Nude Models, its tendency has been to get unbearably hot, and when windows were attempted to be opened the draughts were most dangerous. It is now kept at a pleasant even temperature, and there are no draughts. The reason for this is not difficult to find. The very hot air from the steam-pipes, and the fumes from the gas, are carried off as fast as they are generated, and a continual stream of warm fresh air being supplied, the school is kept comfortable.

(Signed) R. NORMAN SHAW, R.A., Architect.

Re St. Peter's Church, Jarrow-on-Tyne.

Dear Sir,—We have pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of your "Invisible Roof Ventilators," which we fixed in above church with admirable results.—We are, yours faithfully,
